LENGTHY JIM.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I don't rank heavy on sentiment,
And the darts from Cupid's bow—
If ever for me the bow was bent—
Were aimed a deal too low.

But one thing, gents, I will maintain,
In the case of Lengthy Jim—
That is, that Love, with his golden chain,
Got a right smart grip on him

Jim wasn't a man remarkably slick;
His clothes wasn't always fine;
But a truer chap never slung a pick
In a Rocky Mountain mine.

Well, for a while 'twas nip and tuck
In the mines with Lengthy Jim;
But all square fellows will have their luck,
And it came in a "lump" to him.

You miners know what I mean by a "lump;"
I mean the "shining sand,"
The ace that's high when gold is trump,
And lies in the winning hand.

That lump, my gents, was the death of Jim;
For it packed him off to town,
And the old mine saw no more of him—
His star of luck went down.

A fairy form in a French café—
An angel form to him—
The darts of love just flew that day,
Alas! for Lengthy Jim.

Her beauty was that of the Spanish type,
Her form a little petite—
Just wait till I fill my briar pipe,
This here's too much for me.

Perhaps you'd like to try your hand
At this; but let me say
I'll go you ten to one you stand
Before you get half way.

This tellin' of love is all very well
For them poetic chaps;
But there's where a miner don't excel,
Unless he's on his taps.

This French saloon had a charming air,
And he came there every night—
'Twas something else that brought him there
Besides Jim's appetite.

He believed in angel forms above,
And likewise here below;
So Lengthy Jim fell dead in love,
Leastwise he told me so.

He came and went, but never a word
She spoke to Lengthy Jim;
And never for once those lips were stirred
To utter a word to him.

Jim often wondered if angels spoke,
And if he could had his choice,
He would heard the death-like silence broke
By the ring of her silvery voice.

"Why didn't he mouth?" He had'nt a show;
He hadn't a word to say;
Not a word of French did he ever know
But "Parlez vous Francois."

One night he sat in his usual place,
And he heard his angel call
To a dumpy chap, with a freckled face,
As he poked his head through the wall:—

"Wake up there, Patsy, blast yer eyes,
As quick as iver yez can;
Make one of yer finest oyster fries
For the long-legged gintleman."

Jim didn't eat his fry that night;
The magic spell was broke,
The charm went off with his appetite
When the wingless angel spoke.

Poor Jim took worse. That night the tide
Shrank out from the muddy bay,
And tide and Jim went side by side
Clean over the bar, and away.

Next morning boat and tide came back,
But, alas for Lengthy Jim!
The silvery voice and the midnight tack
Had proved too many for him.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"WHISPERING TONGUES CAN POISON TRUTH."

Miss Pyecroft, meanwhile, had been received by Lady Pechford with graceful courtesy and had retired to her room to attire herself for dinner.

Lady Pechford was a person of title, and was seldom alone in the evening; therefore Miss Pyecroft deemed it necessary to dress rather more than she otherwise would have done. She declined the services of the maid, preferring to unpack for herself. She was accustomed to do so, and knew exactly where everything she wanted was to be found. And being left to herself, Miss Pyecroft proceeded with her preparations, every now and then pausing to survey the objects around—even as John Carteret at the self-same moment was doing.

"French," said Miss Pyecroft, stepping up to the toilet table, and examining the oval mirror, set in gilt, with brackets for lights, and a profusion of lace, muslin, and pink satin ribbon "flowing about everywhere," as Miss Pyecroft expressed it. "French—very French. One might imagine one had crossed the Channel, with all this gilding, and these draperies, and glasses, and fancies. And Lady Pechford is very French also—perhaps rather too French for a widow."

And Miss Pyecroft shook her head, with a natural Pyecroft antipathy to anything foreign.

Then she proceeded to dress; and about a quarter of an hour before dinner-time a figure descended to the drawing-room decidedly un-French in its appearance, save in the similarity of the formal frizzed curls that adorned either side of Miss Pyecroft's brow to those seen in some of the old portraits of Queen Mary of Amelie. But with this slight approximation to the picture of the ex-queen, all resemblance to anything at all French ended. Miss Pyecroft's handsome black satin, with full bodice and unfashionable sleeves, bore the impress of English country make very strongly; her rich lace collar was larger than those now worn; her black gold watch and seals were worn quite conspicuously; her cap was after an ancient model and had a good deal of black velvet mixed with crimson roses about it, and her gloves were of a pale lemon color.

Lady Pechford took in the whole at a glance. The articles were all handsome, of their kind.

"The woman might have been better dressed at half the price," was Lady Pechford's decision—"more harmoniously."

But harmony never entered Miss Pyecroft's mind. She had no turn for the artistic.

"If she had," mused Lady Pechford, "she could never wear that thing upon her head."

Whilst Miss Pyecroft, appraising Lady Pechford from her own peculiar standpoint, reprehended the lace lappets and gold pins as a poor substitute for the orthodox head-dress that, in her estimation, Lady Pechford should be wearing.

"My mother wore a widow's cap to the day of her death. But fashions change sadly," reflected Miss Pyecroft.

And she was inclining to become a little antagonistic. She had always set her face against anything French and she hoped she should not find herself obliged, out of politeness, to compromise her principles in any way.

But when Lady Pechford began to talk, there was a charm in her manner that fascinated Miss Pyecroft in spite of herself; and though she kept upon her guard at first, before the evening was over she was ready to declare that Lady Pechford was one of the most agreeable women she had ever met with.

"You must tell me all about Broadmead," said Lady Pechford. "I quite long to hear about it. I do not find my cousin, Mr. Carteret, half so communicative as I could wish."

Miss Pyecroft nodded significantly, and the nod was not lost on Lady Pechford, who, however, went on without seeming to observe it—

"My heart is quite drawn towards the place, since an old friend of mine is there—one whom I knew in my youthful days"—here Lady Pechford waxed sentimental and sighed slightly—"those golden days with roses crowned, Miss Pyecroft, that once lost never return to us again. You have reminiscences—sweet reminiscences—yourself, without doubt?"

Miss Pyecroft nodded a little testily, saying to herself, "French, French," and would probably have added "Rousseau," had she known anything of him, but as "Rousseau's Dream"—which was occasionally used as a hymn tune at Broadmead—was the only association she had with the French philosopher, the link was too slight to serve her at the present crisis.

"Yes," continued Lady Pechford; "in my early married life, I hope I profited by the ministry of Dr. Crawford, then a curate at Driffington. The heart returns to those old days very pleasantly and I should like to hear him preach once more."

"A very sound preacher," interposed Miss Pyecroft. "You would be sure of good orthodoxy from him."

"Ah!" said Lady Pechford, inwardly recoiling from the description; and then, relapsing into the sentimental again, she proceeded:—"But one hears with different ears in the bloom of time, and when the fruit is in its prime—or when it is decaying! But you must describe Broadmead to me; I seem to have so many associations with it. Let me see—my cousin, Mr. Carteret, one; the Crawfords, two; Captain Stanfield and his son, three; Mrs. Seaton, four. I used to know Mrs. Seaton long, long ago, but it ages since we met. We should see strange alterations in one another." And Lady Pechford glanced complacently at a mirror. "Do people grow old very, very fast at Broadmead, Miss Pyecroft?"

Miss Pyecroft bridled up a little; she gave a prim smile and then replied, in a matter-of-fact manner—

"I am sixty-eight, Lady Pechford"—as if leaving Lady Pechford to answer to herself as to the ravages of time in the quiet village.

"Sixty-eight!"—and Lady Pechford elevated her eyebrows. "Is it possible?" she exclaimed, with an accent worthy of the son-in-law of James II—"is it possible? And not a streak of silver in your hair. Mine is very gray."

And she regarded the stiff frizzed curls, shaded by the blond of Miss Pyecroft's cap, with admiration.

Miss Pyecroft coughed uncomfortably. There was a slight struggle in her mind between truth, and a certain awkwardness of having to speak of what she had never before found herself in a position to state in so many words. Truth, however, had the upper hand.

"I wear a front, Lady Pechford," said Miss Pyecroft, throwing as much dignity into the confession as it was possible to do.

"I beg your pardon," said Lady Pechford, hastily, suddenly roused to a sense of the ludicrous, and she glided into another subject.

"We shall have a quiet evening together, I hope, for I have not asked any one in to-night. I thought you would be tired after your journey, and besides, I wanted to have a confidential talk with you, Miss Pyecroft. I have quite looked forward to your coming, and now that I have seen you, I feel quite sure that I may trespass upon your kindness, and say just what I like to you, with the certainty that it will go no farther. May I not?" pleaded Lady Pechford, with one of her most insinuating smiles.

"Certainly, Lady Pechford, certainly," responded Miss Pyecroft, wondering what Lady Pechford could possibly wish to consult her about. Probably, some point of doctrine, for Miss Pyecroft plumed herself upon her doctrine, and was not afraid of entering the theological lists with the most profound thinkers.

But after dinner, when they were comfortably seated in the drawing-room again, Miss Pyecroft found that the subject to be discussed was neither heterodoxy nor orthodoxy.

"You will be quite curious, Miss Pyecroft, to know what I am going to ask you about, and what I am going to confide to you; but I am not intending to look upon you as a stranger, for I seem to know you already, and to feel that, in my anxiety to do the best for my young relative—for it is about Mr. Carteret that I wish to consult you—you will give me the benefit of your superior wisdom."

Whenever Miss Pyecroft's superior wisdom was appealed to, she was disarmed at once, and, in fact—so far as a Pyecroft could be supposed to do so—she rather lost her balance.

"I am very anxious about my cousin," continued Lady Pechford. "When he came here I was given to understand—not at all definitely, only very vaguely, indeed—that there had been—that there was—a sort of love affair somewhere that was not very likely to come to anything. And somehow or other I have connected this vague rumor with Broadmead; and I have often wished to meet with some one who could satisfy my mind upon the subject, without in any way doing damage to what I fervently trust are Mr. Carteret's present prospects. And I feel, my dear Miss Pyecroft, that you can throw a light upon my cousin's sojourn at Broadmead, and can guide me by your judicious counsel."

"Well," returned Miss Pyecroft, "perhaps I may be able to do so, though I should be the last person to speak upon the subject if you had not asked me. I think I may say that, in all probability, the report was connected with Broadmead; and, indeed, I may say that at one time there was a very prevalent impression that Mr. Carteret was actually engaged. But this is most strictly confidential, Lady Pechford. I should not wish Mr. Carteret to think that I had ever breathed such an idea."

"Of course not—certainly not. I would not even insinuate it to him."

"The more especially," Miss Pyecroft went on, "as I have reason to believe that there was never anything in it beyond a mere flirtation."

"You relieve me beyond measure. And the young lady?"

Miss Pyecroft waxed mysterious.

"All's well that ends well, Lady Pechford. Second love is sometimes wiser than first."

"Now what is the woman driving at?" thought Lady Pechford. "Can there be any one else in the case?" Then she said aloud:—"I have been half fearing that there might be a sort of entanglement that we regretted now, and that he felt it honorable to hold to, in spite of his wishes turning in another direction; for between ourselves, Miss Pyecroft, there is—" and Lady Pechford paused.

Miss Pyecroft bore down triumphantly.

"I think I can forestall what you are intending to tell me. Captain Stanfield mentioned something of it at Broadmead."

"Did he?" exclaimed Lady Pechford—"the dear, honest, straightforward creature! Who would have given him credit for being so discerning—so observing. But these simple, unsuspecting, seafaring men sometimes arrive at conclusions more quickly than we cautious women. Did he mention any name?"

"Wardlaw," said Miss Pyecroft.

"Capital!" ejaculated Lady Pechford.

"And some friends of mine at Comminster also spoke of it. They had been staying at Linthorp during the summer and had seen what was going on."

"Ah!" returned Lady Pechford, "it is impossible to prevent these matters from becoming public, however quiet people may try to keep them. Sometimes I think that I will warn Mr. Carteret to be a little more careful; but then one sometimes does harm by intermeddling."

"Precisely my opinion, Lady Pechford. One should see and hear all that one possibly can, and say nothing. Leave people to manage their own affairs in their own way and take no notice of what does not immediately concern one's self."

"Very, very dear Miss Pyecroft, your sentiments are perfectly charming. Exactly my own ideas, and just what I am trying to carry out in the present case. I want to hear everything and know everything and lock it safely in the recesses of my own heart. And you so relieve me, by telling me that there has been nothing but a mere flirtation—no fear of broken hearts or broken vows."

"Broken hearts!" repeated Miss Pyecroft, with some acerbity. "No—I should think there was no fear of that, Diana—"

And Miss Pyecroft stopped—the name slipped out by accident.

"Diana!" said Lady Pechford, softly.

"I should not have mentioned the name, Lady Pechford; but I know that with you it is sacred."

Perfectly so; but you must tell me a little more, now that you have roused my curiosity. Who is she?—who is her father?—who is her mother?—what sort of people are they?"

"Both dead. Her father died without a penny, and left h's daughter dependent upon the kindness of friends."

"Of course," said Lady Pechford to herself. "What an escape for John!" Then aloud—"We must hope that she will meet with a rich husband."

"No fear of not doing so," answered Miss Pyecroft, nodding mysteriously.

"She has, then, another string to her bow?" said Lady Pechford.

"And one not likely to break, if all that is said is true—Jasper Seaton."

"Seaton! I am positively more interested than I expected to be. The son of my old acquaintance, Mrs. Seaton, doubtless."

"But there is no engagement that I know of, Lady Pechford," said Miss Pyecroft, drawing in a little. "And I have never heard a word officially upon the subject, either from Mrs. Seaton, or Jasper, or Di. I don't suppose there is any regular engagement; but when two people are constantly together, one can easily see what it will end in."

"Certainly, certainly. And I wish Mr. Seaton success with all my heart, and a happy settlement of difficulties for all parties. You see, my dear Miss Pyecroft, that though it is all very well for a rich man like Mr. Seaton to marry a portionless girl, it would be the height of absurdity for a poor man without prospects to do so. John Carteret must look out for a fortune, since he has none himself."

"And I presume that I may conclude he has already done so."

"No, my dear Miss Pyecroft, you are to conclude nothing of the sort, from anything that I have said. You must use your own eyes; and if you like to put any faith in Captain Stanfield's, you may do so. But you must hold my communications to be as if they were all unsaid. No one must ever know that we have ever spoken upon the subject. We might destroy everything if we allowed people to know we were consulting over their destinies. No—I have told you none of my cousin's secrets, and you have told me none of the Broadmead gossip. We know without knowing: we see without having our attention called to it. And we take the gossip of the world for what it is worth."

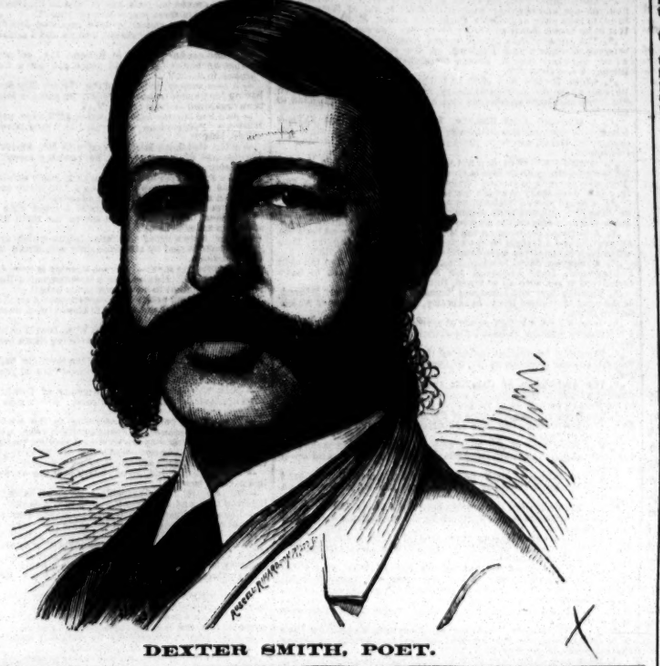
Miss Pyecroft did not quite follow out Lady Pechford's argument—it sounded a little sophistical. It might only be, however, that there was a French atmosphere about everything, in which a Pyecroft found it difficult to breathe; and Miss Pyecroft began to feel a little uncertain whether, in the warmth of the confidential discussion, she had not said a little more than was quite wise.

"Remember, Lady Pechford, I do not believe that there is an engagement at present," were Miss Pyecroft's last words, as they parted for the night. "It may not even have entered into the minds of Diana and Jasper, for anything I know to the contrary."

"I quite understand," returned Lady Pechford, "and you need have no fears about my discretion. But we will hope that the young lady may not be left without a lover."

When Miss Pyecroft was once again in the solitude of her own apartment, she carefully deposited her adornments in their several resting places, threw on her dressing gown, and, putting on her spectacles, sat down to meditate. Why she put on her spectacles she might not have been able to explain; but she never could meditate comfortably without them—they seemed to bear with them an inspiration of wisdom, and, in the present instance, protected her eyes from the blazing fire. She gazed into the flames, as though to draw from them some ray of light that might help her to understand Lady Pechford more completely.

"Very agreeable, very confiding, very taking—but very French," said Miss Pyecroft, poking the fire between each adjective. "If it were not that there is too much of the French element, I should say she was the most charming woman I had seen for some time. But one feels with her as with a foreigner almost: that the language is, somehow, different—little turns and twisting that one is not accustomed to in every day life. I suppose I shall get accustomed to it in a day or two, and know where I am; but at present"—and Miss Pyecroft glanced round the room—"I feel as if I were in Paris without going there."



DEXTER SMITH, POET.

Lady Pechford had dismissed her maid. She too was pondering over the evening and over the evening's guest.

"A pompous, good-natured, stupid old woman," said Lady Pechford. "She does not understand one-half of what she has told me. I see the case exactly, and John Carteret must not marry the girl. It would be madness. It would only end in misery; for the proverb's true enough—'When poverty comes in at the door, love flies out at the window.' No, my cousin, I will save you if I can; and some day we will laugh over it together and you will thank me."

And Lady Pechford, meaning no ill, retired to rest. The world would go on better if she could only manage it do with it—for she had there was something amiable in her wish that it could be so. The drawback was that other people might not agree with her. However, as it was an impossibility, she was obliged to content herself with things as they were, and be satisfied with catching at any straw that she could divert from its natural course.

By the time that Miss Pyecroft joined her friends in their lodgings, Lady Pechford had contrived to let her should see with the eyes that she wished her to see with. And when she was fairly launched in Linthorp as a temporary inhabitant, she began to hear with the ears that the superficial Linthorp world heard with and received as many false impressions as ordinary observers never fail to receive, upon which to found an estimate of things in general and to form her own opinions of matters individually.

Nevertheless she was much more cautious with others than she had been with Lady Pechford, whose manners and attentions had cast a glamour round her; and no one learned from her what John Carteret's experiences at Broadmead might have been.

Lady Pechford preserved a similar reticence and never alluded to Broadmead, excepting in the most casual manner in connection with the Crawfords.

"I suppose you know very little of Miss Pyecroft?" she said one day, to John Carteret. "She seems a pleasant sort of woman, but a little behind the age."

"She thinks, on the contrary, that the present age has not arrived at her standard," returned John Carteret, smiling.

"Ah, well—the result is the same, whichever way one puts it," answered Lady Pechford, carelessly.

She was beginning to be doubtful whether her course was as clear as she had anticipated, until one morning a letter arrived from Captain Stanfield, bringing an unexpected stroke of fortune in her favor.

Captain Stanfield was returning to Linthorp in the course of a few days—for there is no place like the seaside for me," he wrote. "I'm going to the Crawfords on my way back, if you have any commands there. I have found a sort of new relation at Broadmead—a little god-daughter, whom I have every reason to believe has a fair prospect of being very happily married there: that is, if my eyes and ears—and perhaps a little more—do not deceive me."

"Who can this little god-daughter be?" asked Lady Pechford, as she read the passage to John Carteret.

John Carteret went a little paler than usual, but Lady Pechford appeared to be looking another way.

"I am so glad that Captain Stanfield is returning to Linthorp," she went on, without seeming to observe that she had received no reply to her question. "Such a dear, charming, old person, and such an acute observer. I was quite astonished at his insight into Linthorp affairs, and quite alarmed at the judgment he might pronounce upon us all."

And she continued to converse upon indifferent topics, apparently losing sight of the letter and Captain Stanfield's god-daughter altogether. But she nevertheless was well assured that the shaft had flown as she had intended; and John Carteret went home with another argument on the side of his doubts and fears.

Not that he believed that Diana was at all aware whither her heart was straying. He knew that she still thought herself true to him. But he doubted whether some day she might not awake and find that her love had been given too early, too lightly; and that, with the growth of years, another and a deeper love had sprung to life.

"There must be something in it," mused Lady Pechford. "Doubtless the girl's a flirt, and the sooner John Carteret learns it the better."

Lady Pechford was no worse than her neighbors; but when a woman dips into diplomacy, she contrives to entangle simple affairs in as hopeless an inextricability as the most distinguished diplomatists can possibly manage to entangle greater ones.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE WHISPER REACHES BROADMEAD.

Broadmead was bearing her spring crown royally. March was nearly at an end, and the winds had blown over the land and were still blowing freshly, as though they would let nothing rest, but were summoning every blade and bud to life and activity; and the heavens looked brighter, as well they might, since the restless winds had driven the heavy snow clouds northward, where they might stay packed upon the tops of the ice mountains until the cold season came round again, and the earth wanted her ermine mantle to throw over her shivering form and to protect the shrubs and plants that crept under its wide folds.

Almost a month since Charles Stanfield had been at Broadmead, and had spoken such unexpected words to Diana as it seemed longer to her than she had brooded over the visit, and reproached herself for having given pain to one she esteemed so highly. She had tried to keep his secret; but, somehow, Jasper had contrived to know it; whether she had told him or he had guessed it, she was not quite sure; but it came to pass that he knew it, as he knew everything concerning her.

Yet he had not calculated upon such a catastrophe as this; and he was filled with alarm as to what might have transpired in her reply. Naturally, she might have told Mr. Stanfield of her engagement; and, if so, it would entirely refute Captain Stanfield's story, and perhaps lead to an explanation which would place matters upon a much more secure footing than they were at present between Diana and John Carteret.

Besides this, an open acknowledgement of her engagement, which might possibly slip out through Charles Stanfield to the Crawfords, would render utterly useless all the insinuations and suggestions that Mrs. Seaton had of late propagated in Broadmead. For Jasper was not unaware of these, nor was he unaware of the construction that might be put upon the relationship in which he appeared to Diana.

As long as John Carteret was lost sight of, popular opinion would take the phase he wished it to take; and, with patient working, things in time might take the turn he wished them to take. For this he strove—for this he set his whole energies to work. He took advantage of every circumstance, however slight, that he could bend to his own purpose. If he was withheld by no principle; he wavered not in his determination; his will was inflexible—and yet he had a curious conscientiousness that prevented his taking any active step. It must be the work of others—forced, as it were, upon him; and bearing him up, without any effort of his own, upon a tide of misapprehension that it was not his business to correct.

He knew, as well as he knew his own heart, that John Carteret was true to Diana, and he never actually said to the contrary; yet the whole unspoken action of his present life was to prove John Carteret false. And Diana, unused to diplomacy, whilst she saw the hatred that Mrs. Seaton bore to John Carteret, and estimated her words accordingly, was blind to the subtler antagonism of her son.

Jasper Seaton was somewhat at a loss to discover the especial point he wished to know. He could ask no questions, neither could he refer to the subject; so he was obliged to continue in a state of suspense, each day expecting some further development that might more entirely conteract his plans. He was in a continual mental fever, nervous and restless; and Mrs. Seaton began to fear that Jasper's health was failing, even as Anne's had done. She wondered whether his accident had anything to do with it—for he had never seemed to recover his strength entirely.

"I wish Jasper had more color. How pale he is!" she said to Diana.

"Is he paler than usual?" answered Diana. "I had not noticed it."

But when awakened by Mrs. Seaton's remark to perceive that there was a change in Jasper—that he looked tired and worn, and also that he was falling into some of his old irritable manner—she was disposed to think that the accident had been more serious than they had supposed; therefore, when Mrs. Seaton suggested a change, Diana found herself advocating it and urging upon Jasper to think of himself and take some care of his health.

"The seaside is dull," said Mrs. Seaton.

Diana's heart gave a leap. Why not Linthorp?

Perhaps Jasper understood the sudden brightness that came into her face; for he said with almost a shudder:—

"Too cold, too cold. No, I am better where I am."

"We might go south," said Mrs. Seaton.

And Diana's little flash of hope died out within her. Yes, after all, what did it matter? She could scarcely be farther off from John Carteret than she was now, and it might be good for Jasper. And she wondered if she were growing selfish. Yet it was a long time since she had seen John Carteret. She had called several times at Brierly House—ostensibly, to bring some message from Mrs. Seaton, or to make some especial inquiry as to the best method of helping some of the poor people; but, in reality, in the hope of hearing from Linthorp or of some news that might interest her. In this, however, she had been disappointed; for Miss Pyecroft—in the solemnity and importance she felt at having become impromptu the confidante of Lady Pechford—had sealed her lips and withheld her pen upon the subject of John Carteret. Therefore, though Diana heard of the meeting at Comminster and of Dr. Pennithorne, of Lady Pechford and of the visitors who happened to be at Linthorp, she did not even hear St. Botolph's or Mr. Wardlaw alluded to, nor any mention of John Carteret. Miss Pyecroft was keeping everything to herself, until she could burst forth in the full glory of full and complete information.

But one afternoon, not long afterwards, Diana was listlessly strolling through the village alone. She had been expecting a letter from Linthorp, but it had not come, and she felt anxious and unhappy and so had determined to go down to the Neris. She always felt happier after a talk with the Signora; and to-day she felt particularly in want of consolation—a heavy cloud seemed to hang over her, and some unseen weight to press her down; whilst she had a sort of dim foreboding that everything hopeful was being swept away.

So she wandered on; and as she drew near the Neris' cottage, she saw Miss Letty Pyecroft coming along with an open letter in her hand. She had just met the postman and had taken it from him, and was hastily reading it as she walked onwards. When she reached Diana she stopped.

"Oh, Di! I've just got a letter from Rebecca. You will like to hear it—for it seems to be all about Mr. Carteret."

The bright look came back, and in an instant her weary heart was transformed into an eager, listening one—anxiously waiting for Miss Letty's next words.

"There's a wonderful news about Mr. Carteret, Di. And yet it isn't so wonderful—for it's just what Captain Stanfield told us. It seems that the incumbent of St. Botolph's is quite as rich as people said, and that his daughter is very handsome. But I'll read it out of the letter if you like Di. You and Mr. Carteret used to be such good friends that I know you will be glad to hear."

Diana turned sick at heart. She scarcely seemed to hear what Miss Letty was saying. She should understand it better if she read it herself.

"Will you let me look at the letter, Miss Letty?" she said, involuntarily.

Miss Letty hesitated, for just then her eye fell upon a passage that she had not noticed before—"Don't mention this in Broadmead at present."

"Dear me, what have I done?" she said, in alarm. "Rebecca says it isn't to be mentioned, and here have I been telling you all about it. What shall I do? But you won't tell any one—will you, Di? Rebecca would be so annoyed! Dear me! Dear me!"

But when awakened by Miss Seaton's remark to perceive that there was a change in Jasper—that he looked tired and worn, and also that he was falling into some of his old irritable manner—she was disposed to think that the accident had been more serious than they had supposed; therefore, when Mrs. Seaton suggested a change, Diana found herself advocating it and urging upon Jasper to think of himself and take some care of his health.

In this, however, she had been disappointed; for Miss Pyecroft—in the solemnity and importance she felt at having become impromptu the confidante of Lady Pechford—had sealed her lips and withheld her pen upon the subject of John Carteret. Therefore, though Diana heard of the meeting at Comminster and of Dr. Pennithorne, of Lady Pechford and of the visitors who happened to be at Linthorp, she did not even hear St. Botolph's or Mr. Wardlaw alluded to, nor any mention of John Carteret. Miss Pyecroft was keeping everything to herself, until she could burst forth in the full glory of full and complete information.

But one afternoon, not long afterwards, Diana was listlessly strolling through the village alone. She had been expecting a letter from Linthorp, but it had not come, and she felt anxious and unhappy and so had determined to go down to the Neris. She always felt happier after a talk with the Signora; and to-day she felt particularly in want of consolation—a heavy cloud seemed to hang over her, and some unseen weight to press her down; whilst she had a sort of dim foreboding that everything hopeful was being swept away.

So she wandered on; and as she drew near the Neris' cottage, she saw Miss Letty Pyecroft coming along with an open letter in her hand. She had just met the postman and had taken it from him, and was hastily reading it as she walked onwards. When she reached Diana she stopped.

"Oh, Di! I've just got a letter from Rebecca. You will like to hear it—for it seems to be all about Mr. Carteret."

The bright look came back, and in an instant her weary heart was transformed into an eager, listening one—anxiously waiting for Miss Letty's next words.

"There's a wonderful news about Mr. Carteret, Di. And yet it isn't so wonderful—for it's just what Captain Stanfield told us. It seems that the incumbent of St. Botolph's is quite as rich as people said, and that his daughter is very handsome. But I'll read it out of the letter if you like Di. You and Mr. Carteret used to be such good friends that I know you will be glad to hear."

Diana turned sick at heart. She scarcely seemed to hear what Miss Letty was saying. She should understand it better if she read it herself.

"Will you let me look at the letter, Miss Letty?" she said, involuntarily.

Miss Letty hesitated, for just then her eye fell upon a passage that she had not noticed before—"Don't mention this in Broadmead at present."

"Dear me, what have I done?" she said, in alarm. "Rebecca says it isn't to be mentioned, and here have I been telling you all about it. What shall I do? But you won't tell any one—will you, Di? Rebecca would be so annoyed! Dear me! Dear me!"

"No; I will not tell any one."

"That's a dear creature. I know I can trust you. Not by word, or deed, or look—remember!"

And she went away, nodding and smiling.

For the next few minutes Diana was so utterly bewildered that she knew not where she was, nor what path she was taking; until she suddenly, as it seemed to her, awaked and found herself in the pine wood, among the great tall stems; and she sat down upon a thick bed of moss, near a broken stump, and tried to recall her thoughts.

Had Miss Letty really been telling her about John Carteret, or had there been some mistake?

And, looking through the arching trees, her eyes fell on the tender spikes of green, which soon would be quivering with waves of blue. How well she remembered pointing out the hyacinth glory to John Carteret not a year ago, and exactly how she had felt, and what she was thinking of, and now—

"It is not true, it is not true!" she almost shrieked. "I will not believe it, except from John Carteret himself."

Then the sound of the water slipping over the stones caught her ear. Trickle, trickle—like a mocking spirit, chattering something unintelligible. And then again she thought—as she had thought before—of Undine, and half wondered how it was that people cared to be immortal. If one had no soul one could lie down and be at rest. Could perfect rest come without forgetfulness? And suddenly the words came to her heart as though a voice had spoken them:—"O, that I had the wings of a dove, that I might flee away and be at rest!"

Upward!—the dove flies upward!

Whither?

"It is not true—it is not true!" she said again, as if strengthening herself against the words she had seen in Miss Pyecroft's own handwriting. Yet Miss Pyecroft was a truthful person.

What should she do?

Wait, wait! What else is there for man to do but wait? It is all waiting upon the earth: waiting for flight!—waiting till the soul's wings are no more clogged by earth.

She dipped her hand in the stream and bathed her fevered forehead and her parched lips; and then she smoothed her hair; and, after sitting for awhile, rose up and thought she would go home.

She could not go to the Neris now. There would be danger of betraying Miss Letty if she did so, for the Signora always knew if anything had gone wrong; and, indeed, Diana generally told her, so that she could scarcely hide this from her. No; she would not go to the Neris; she would go home and practice the new symphony she was learning for Signor Neri. Then she need not talk to any one; and the music, perhaps, might have some soothing revelation for her—at any rate, it would prevent her having to talk to any one. For the rest, she must wait until she should hear from John Carteret again; and, until then, she would believe that all that Miss Pyecroft had said was false—that some singular delusion had taken possession of her, and that her next letter would contradict it all.

She sprang up—she tried to shake off her fear—she tried to be brave, to disbelieve, to be full of hope and confidence. But trying does not bear up the wings of hope, and when it comes to making an effort to command them, confidence and trust are not easy to retain.

And Diana, repeating over and over again, "It is not true!" went her way homewards.

MODERN LETTER WRITER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

LETTER FROM THE COUNTRY.

DEAR SIR.—I take my pen in hand to drop a few lines to let you know that I am well and to hope they will find you the same. Do like that I am married? I am married now. I followed to take charge, for a short season, of your farm. Things don't go on as you led me to expect they would; and heaven knows I have worked like a mule. First of all, I went to cleaning up. You won't believe it, but I found two cupboards full of seed all tied up in papers; some person having put them there. I immediately threw them away and gave the place a good scrubbing. I also sold a traveling junk-dealer a lot of hoes and rakes and plows and much other rubbish that I found hidden away in an out-house. He bought them for old iron at a half cent per pound. The cows are all getting on finely. The first day I saw them looking over the fence of the corn field and I thought they looked droopy. I immediately took down the gate and let them into the cornfield, and they have picked up wonderfully ever since. They are fat as they can be. This reminds me that I came across an old mill at the lower end of the farm, which was full of old dried up corn on the husk. It would not boil, so I thought, as it only drew rats, it would be best to burn it all. So I did, and by some accident the old mill caught and burned up too. However, it was only in the way and I am glad it is gone. There are lots of nice birds here—all black as night. They are said to be crows. I give them plenty to eat and they come around us in hundreds. It is so cheerful to have plenty of them. There was a lot of vines running all over the arbor, which made it so dark in the house that I took them all down and put them into the fire. You see by this that I have taken care of your farm in the best style. You will find it a different place when you come back. Yours, &c.

P.S. I found a little house down by a large pool of water, all filled up with ice. This must have frozen there last winter. It was an awful job to get the ice out, but I succeeded, and now the house is empty and ready for occupation. I threw all the ice into the river. Some men came and took it up again and put it in carts and carted it away. But farming is dreadful work. I took a scythe out and scythed away in the garden for two hours and not a thing has come up yet.

LETTER FROM TOWN.

MY FRIEND.—I shall be home immediately. The way you have been carrying on my farm has been so remarkable that I can't remain in town a minute longer.

Besides, I don't like town. People here expect too much. A man asked me last night if I was going to change my shirt in the morning; and I had only worn that shirt two weeks! And another man said this morning that he couldn't get his boots on, but might have done it if he had been wearing my stockings. He said they had the strength of Goliath. What did he mean? Besides and above all, I haven't had any appetite since I have been here. They only give us a pound of beefsteak apiece for dinner, with some veal and ham and potatoes and tomatoes and onions and asparagus and pudding and pies, and such trifles; and she fact is, I am half starved.

I went to the opera last night. It seemed so very short, somehow. I was hardly in before I was out again; and I didn't hear a word. The ladies say I fell asleep, but it is not true. To-night I am going to hear a man called Boother, in the character of "Othello," or "Pontius Pilate," or "Polonius," or something of the kind. He will be supported by a comedian named Greeley, in an opera entitled, "What I Know About Farming." This may seem to you who know all about town matters, somewhat mixed; but you will guess at what I mean.

Some of the people here are quite nice after all. They are very lively, especially the conductors and street car men. One of these funny fellows had a little lark with me yesterday. He wrestled with me on the platform, and banged my hat over my eyes, and was as affable as a gentleman. There was such a crowd about, that somehow I found out afterwards I had lost my pocket-book. It may have been stolen by an old man who sat by the door and said the street car system of New York was a disgrace to the city. The lively conductor told me confidentially that the old man was a ghastly block, and would have his merits if somebody were to put a pill in him. He might have meant a blue mass pill.

I am coming home to-morrow. You had better not make any more improvements until I get back. Yours truly,

A LITTLE BOY'S LETTER.

DEAR PA.—Since you have been gone to Boston we have had such a nice time. Ma and me have enjoyed ourselves every minute. Mr. Martin, who has such a big nose, has been here, too, all day. He is in the parlor with ma now, and she gave me five cents to go up stairs and write you a nice, long, long letter. Ma was crying so when you went away, and you told her to cry and be cheerful and lively till you come back, and that you wouldn't be away very long. She was lively just as soon as you had gone. Mr. Martin came right in and saw her face, and said there was a strawberry on her lip, and the only thing could do it any good was for some person to kiss her. I was going to kiss her, but Mr. Martin said I might get a strawberry on my lip, so he would kiss ma for me. And he did, and she laughed and slapped him, and said he was a wretch. But I think he is a nice man, only his nose is too long. Ma is afraid of robbers, and to-night Mr. Martin is going to stay all night, he says. This will be so nice, won't it? Your little son,

NOTE.—That angel child might have taken any amount of medals in a baby show. He was artless, you perceive, as a bird. But after writing this letter it was noted as a remarkable fact that Martin's nose wasn't so big as it had been. Martin also was confined for some months to the house and two doctors at the door every day. When he finally came out he limped awfully, and said he never thought rheumatism would have pulled a man down so.

DEXTER SMITH.

Dexter Smith, author of "Put Me in My Little Bed," and a number of other songs, was born in Salem, Mass., in 1839, and removed to Boston upon attaining his majority, where he has since resided. His earlier contributions to the leading periodicals of the day attracted considerable attention. His first song, entitled "She is Waiting For Us There," was sung by the Buckleys and other troupes, for many years, and still has a large sale. It was not until his song, "Ring the Bell Softly," was published, however, that Dexter Smith became so widely and popularly known. It was extensively quoted by the press of America and Europe, translated into several foreign languages, and cited in Congress by Hon. Mr. Ashley, on Dec. 17th, 1868, on the occasion of the memorial services on the life and character of Thaddeus Stevens. Other popular poems followed, "Save the Boy," and "Put Me in My Little Bed" being the author's more recent success. A letter from Queen Victoria, dated at Buckingham Palace, Oct. 10th, 1870, to Dexter Smith, expresses her approval of his poems, a volume of which is in the possession of the royal family.

PUNCHING A PANTHER'S HEAD.—Among the latest advices from the East Indies are the following:—Captain Westmacott has been severely wounded by a panther. Intelligence was brought into Baroda that a man-eating tiger was was prowling about the jungle near Powaghurhill. Two gentlemen from camp went out after the brute, with a firm determination to "bag him," as he was said to have killed six men and a boy very recently. The gentlemen were Captain Westmacott and Mr. Little, the executive engineer, P. W. Department, Kairs. It appears that they roused the animal at or near a village

MUTUAL, Spring Valley.—"We are challenged to a match. On the ground the challenging party produce a ball marked 'Bounding Rock.' A object to play with it on account of its having more rubber in than the rules call for. The umpire, one of their choosing, says it is a regulation ball of 1871 and calls game. We play with the ball under protest. After the game is over we open the ball and weigh the rubber. It weighs 2¼ ounces. The umpire claims that bounding rock is a manufactured ball. I claim it is not. Please answer which is right."——The umpire was wrong. No ball is legal unless name of maker and the figures of the size and weight of the ball is stamped on it.

M. H. P., Memphis, Tenn.—The Broadway Theatre was situated on the east side of Broadway between Worth and Pearl streets. The last performances given there were on April 2d, 1859, afternoon and evening, for the benefit of Mr. E. Eddy. It was shortly after torn down, and its site is occupied by business houses. A theatre situated on the west side of Broadway, near the corner of Broome street, was christened the Broadway Theatre, and that building was torn down in the latter part of April, 1865, and its site is now occupied by business edifices. There is now no theatre in New York city bearing that name.

F. DARWIN, Canton, Miss.—1. Queen Victoria's maiden name was Victoria. The family name was Guelph, but she never bore it. 2. The height of Chas. Freeman, the American giant, was 8 feet 10½ inches. 3. You cannot throw up. 4. Heenan and Sayers fought on the 17th of April, 1860. 5. He never changed his name. 6. To procure one of Mace's colors from Ed. James, price $5. 7. The late husband of Queen Victoria was named Albert Francis (Albert) Augustus Charles Emanuel, Prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

F. W., Philadelphia, Pa.—The law relating to your question reads thus: "That he shall, at the time of his application to be admitted, declare on oath, or affirmation, before some one of the courts aforesaid, that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and shall be entirely and forever renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereignty whatever, and particularly, by name, the prince, potentate, state or sovereignty whereof he was before a citizen or subject; which proceedings shall be recorded by the clerk of the court."

R. H., Jr.—When a foul ball is struck the ball is dead only as far as putting a base runner out, as the striker can be put out on a foul hit. The base runner, however, cannot be put out until the ball has been batted in the hands of the pitcher, he standing where he chooses. In case such a ball should be stopped by outsiders the ball becomes dead until it is held in the hands of the pitcher while he is standing within the lines of the pitcher. The umpire's decision is final.

MOUNTAINEER.—The championship is to be decided by the number of matches—best three out of five—won by each club, no games counting except regular contests in which the rules of the game are strictly observed. All the games the Rockfords played in, in which Hastings took part up to June 14th, will not count; neither will those of the Olympic Club in which Hall took part during June and up to July 8th.

CUT BONE.—"When the batsman calls for a low ball and strikes at a high one, I claim that he loses his privilege for that time at the bat and entry the pitcher accordingly that a ball delivered over the home plate, between the knee and shoulder, will be considered a fair ball and so decided; nice serve, a batsman calling for a high ball and striking at a low one should be ruled in the same way. Am I right?".....Yes; but wrong in your other conclusions.

PLUM.—The Kekionga nine had no right to judge whether the ball was fit to play with or not, the umpire being the sole judge of fair and unfair play. He decided the ball unfit for use and therefore the Kekiongas should have furnished a new ball. As they did not, and as they refused to play when called upon, the umpire legally decided the game in favor of the party ready to play. A ripped ball is not a legal ball and it must be replaced if the umpire so decides, but not otherwise.

O. S., Philadelphia.—1. Our opinion is that, as the judge refused to sign any of the credentials, the party in whose favor the committee on credentials in the convention reported, wins the race, and as H. G. was declared the duly elected delegate, by said committee, the party betting on H. G. is entitled to the stakes. 2. In regard to the second question on the tie vote, T. L. having refused to draw lots, as specified in the rules in case of ties, and E. S. being admitted, the party betting on the latter wins, in our opinion.

J. L. D., Kansas.—There was an 2:50 purse race at the Buffalo meeting in 1869. Idol could not, therefore, trot in it. 2. Idol trotted and won the $300 purse for 2:29 horses. 3. Idol did not trot for the $10,000 purse. 4. The race Idol won was 2:29¼; 2:27; 2:29½; 2:27¼; 2:24; 2:26¾; 2:28¾, she winning the second, third and seventh heats.

GYMNAST, Atlanta, Ga.—The feat of turning a triple somersault has been achieved by several performers. Mr. Aymar accomplished that feat at Pavilion Royal, in London, Eng., in 1856. He afterwards killed himself while performing the feat. James Wheel, an English clown, has achieved it.

CONSTANT READER, Worcester.—We did not make any such statement. The translation has nothing to do with a town becoming a city in England, where borough towns corporate, which are or have been the seat of a bishop or the capital of his see, are alone dignified by that title.

J. L. D., Bockman street.—1. The holder of the ace called on keeps silent, so that the party is not known until the ace is played; this makes the game very interesting and exciting. 2 and 3. You can call on any ace, whether you hold it or not. 4. No, you can call on nothing but an ace. 5. He can call on the ace of diamonds.

BROOKLYN, Brooklyn, L. I.—1. The Maryland Club, of Baltimore, Md., is defunct. 2. We never publish ladies' ages. 3. Bob Hart is traveling with Hart, Hyman and Barney's Minstrels. 4. Write the company for whereabouts, or address him in care of this office. 5. See answer to C. A. G.

NOMENCLATURE, Baltimore.—Preston, a corruption of Priest's Town, is the name of a town in Lancashire, Eng., and, as it was customary to name persons after places in England, we should suppose that the surname, Preston, is English.

E. B. S., Merrimack.—Try your hand on something that will please all classes: the verses are very well in their way, but while calculated to delight a portion of our readers, they would offend others.

T. D., Oaks Corners, N. Y.—Tom Sayers was beaten once only, by his conqueror being Nat. Langham, who could never afterwards be induced to meet him in the ring. He stood 5 ft. 8¾ in., and weighed 182 lbs.

EZRELA, Harrisburg, Pa.—The house you speak of is now in England. The section of the big tree was exhibited in this city a short time ago and is now probably in this vicinity. Johnny Tours, the "big shoe dancer," is in the pigeon shootist.

SCHOOL, Washington.—1. No. 2. No. It requires at least three first base hits, if not four, to earn the first run, and then there must not have been three chances offered to put the side out. Your estimate is correct; that of our Troy correspondent's is erroneous.

WILLIAM.—Not having an association club you are at a loss. Complain to the Champions, of Jersey City, about Harris (Dinsler) of their nine playing in a junior match, as it debars him from playing in the Champion nine for sixty days.

OLD SUBSCRIBER, Scranton, Pa.—Such is the rule, but it is doubtful whether he would receive it, unless special provision was made in the articles. It has never been allowed in this country, and it is not right that it should, in our opinion.

J. H., New Oxford, Pa.—The principal manufacturers here say there has never been such a thing in the market, therefore it is probable that the circular was a "bogus" affair.

H. P., Mattoon, Ill.—Address a letter to John Torry, Braidwood, Ill., for such information as you desire regarding Alex. Ferguson.

C. M. P., Pompoll.—1. Poole beat Morrissey in their rough and tumble fight. 2. Never heard of him or all. Perhaps you mean Billy Manning. He is a first class performer.

W. M. D., New York.—Twenty miles an hour has been trotted in harness by Trustee, Lady Fulton, John Stuart and Captain McGowan.

SMITH, Providence, R. I.—George Palmer's best time is 2:19¼, made at Narragansett Park, Oct. 8th, 1869. We do not know his exact age.

OLD READER, Harisfalls.—1. There is no such law in existence. 2. The diameter or bore of a shot gun determines the guage. 3. Breech loaders are now generally preferred to muzzle loaders.

CHICAGO.—Having bet on the play, the bet is decided by the score of the game and not by the score of the forfeit, the latter being a Judiciary Committee matter, and not a question for the umpire.

E. F. W., Elkhart, Ind.—Harry Whitbeck was the name of the gentleman with Lent's Circus killed at Turner's Station, N. J., September 25, 1865.

D. ATSON, Nevada.—The population of Prussia proper in 1865 was 18,491,220. Alsace and Lorraine are part of the German empire, but not of Prussia.

J. H., Boston, Mass.—According to the latest census London, Eng., had a population of 3,251,804; that of Jeddo, Japan, is over one million and a half, and Pekin, China, has over 1,600,000.

W. D., Philadelphia.—The fastest running time in this country is 1:42 made by Lexington at May meeting this year, by the four-year old colt Palladeon and the three-year old filly Salina.

W. F. B., Richmond, Ind.—1. Send them on promptly and they will be published as often as space will permit. 2. You can procure the song through a news agent.

SUTRO.—The steamer Mary Powell made the trip from Poughkeepsie to New York, including six landings, in 3 hours and 40 minutes, June 11th, 1867.

TUFF, East Saginaw.—James McDonald was referee in the first fight between Charley Gallagher and Tom Allen. Your previous letter did not come to hand.

S. W., Washington, Iowa.—The population of Dublin, Ireland, in 1861, was 286,964. What it is now we are unable to state, as the returns of the census taken this spring have not been officially made.

TYRO, Albany, N. Y.—1. Each having two to go, B's low, Jack, took him out before A's high game, as the point for game is the last to be taken. 2. B, with his low, went out first.

J. D. Orilla.—"Sure things" are a right and proper sort to bet on, providing no fraud is practiced. They are the kind sporting speculators, like other bulls and bears, go for.

HARRY P. F., Detroit.—There is no possibility of arranging for such an event, at least this summer; consequently, it would be useless to agitate the subject.

CONSTANT READER.—If the words "on Saturday" were specifically a part of the terms of the bet, then it is a draw; otherwise it should stand.

SUBSCRIBER, Phila.—Drop a note to Heenan, in our care. He will doubtless inform you, if you enclose an addressed and stamped envelope.

LOVER OF SPORT, Ashley, Pa.—All the songs are not set to music. Those that are can be had of any publisher.

W. H. BRENAN.—We do not appear to have received the letter you refer to.

P. F. H.—A straight flush only ranks as an ordinary flush, beating three of a kind, unless specially agreed upon before playing.

E. W., Arizona.—Mike McCool beat Bill Davis, Sept. 19th, 1866. That was the only time they fought.

C. R., Bangor.—Me.—The bet is not a draw, but is off; consequently each man receives back the amount he staked.

J. A. R., Laketon, Mich.—It is not up to the standard; you might do better on another subject.

J. B. H., Pittsburgh.—1. We have no general agent or correspondent traveling. 2. We have placed your name on the record.

DON JUAN, Baltimore.—It is probable that an arrangement will be made for the future with a personal friend.

A JOHNSON COCKNEY.—We are unable to say. "The proof of the pudding, etc.

C. A. M., New York.—Send $1 to Ed. James, 88 Centre street, and he will forward you a copy.

ED. WELLS, Troy, N. Y.—George Seward ran 100 yards in 9¾ seconds, the fastest time on record.

E. C. M. and W. H. M.—There is no reliable record of such jumping.

SICKLY KELLY, Waltham.—Dan Donnelly died at Dublin, Ireland, Feb. 18th, 1820. He was born in 1750.

J. P. C., Harlem, N. Y.—Three nines and a pair of Jacks beat three aces and a pair of queens, at bluff.

J. J. S., Boston, Mass.—To become president the candidate must be a born citizen of the United States.

DANBURY.—A having played a lone hand and taken all the tricks was entitled to four points.

W. A. S., Danbury, Conn.—Thank you. News items always welcome, but we do not issue any such documents.

S. F. REACH, Elkton, Md.—1. No charge for advertising letters. 2. The firm is no longer in existence.

H. C., Buffalo, N. Y.—O did divide the commission with B if he gave him any part of it.

S. H. H. R., Philadelphia, Pa.—Sixty cents for each insertion. Per three months $6.24.

J. H., Rutherford, Clare.—Booth's Theatre cost about $750,000. 2. Yes, he has a partner. 3. We believe it is not all paid for.

J. H. C., Jr., Newton, N. J.—See circus summary of the present issue.

F. G., Indianapolis, Ind.—We do not require one at present. In the fall we may do so.

FRANK, Boston, Mass.—We never give the private addresses of professional ladies or gentlemen.

J. S., Fort Wayne.—Not having the record of the area of Portopolis, we are unable to make the comparison.

TYRO.—Daniel O'Connel's mock funeral took place in this city on September 22d, 1847.

S. AND W.—The negro minstrel profession is overcrowded. Better abandon all idea of it.

J. A. B., Boston, Mass.—Mr. E. L. Davenport was born in Boston in 1815.

FORD PH LIC.—Such a statement was made, but it was incorrect. He's not dead.

T. J. W.—We are not sufficiently familiar with the billiard tables of western make to say which are to be preferred.

MANSFIELD B. B. C.—We could not publish such a card unless signed by the president and secretary of the club.

W. F. S.—Ace or any other card can be made high by mutual agreement, of course.

A. J. M.—Two points only for a euchre. Only one lone hand is legal.

P. L., New Haven, Ct.—C, having made the trump, played it alone and taken all the tricks, was entitled to four points.

W. E., Gloucester, Mass.—The dealer is entitled to a point for each ace turned up, except in the case of a misdeal.

CONSTANT READER, Cincinnati.—Thanks for attention. Have placed the paper on our exchange list.

T. D. SEAL, Louisville, Ky.—The party having but one to go, and holding low, wins out first.

H. F. W., Lowell.—Should be pleased to gratify you, as you request, but space will not permit at present.

HOYLE.—If one man will agree to play against three and not come out to play his 5th, best of course they will do it for gate money purposes.

H. KEYE.—The rule is plain and proper. The striker is he whose name is next on the list to that of the third man put out.

SAM PEMPTER, Syracuse, N. Y.—The item appeared in one of the dailies of your city.

SPORTSMAN.—1. No strike can be called on the first ball delivered unless the ball is struck at. 2. A low ball.

E. D., Washington.—At the end of the last even innings, whatever that may be.

EAGLE, Continental.—3. Well seasoned willow is the lightest. 2. Yes. 3d. Can't say at present.

J. B. B.—He called the game on account of the grounds not being in condition for fair play.

SPORT, Elmore, O.—The writer's name must always be attached to such communications to ensure insertion.

TOCK KRAUS, Jefferson Barracks.—The sketch will be given shortly.

HANK DARLEY.—Contributions received and will be used as space permits.

ROMAN.—B, having but one to go, not having been set back, and holding high, goes out first.

W. E. H., Baltimore.—Thanks for your interesting contributions; they shall appear at an early day.

W. M. T., Washington.—Thank you; we will look out for him hereafter.

C. A. G., Joliet, Ill.—1. Send to Ed. James as per advertisement. 2. In playing euchre, if your partner assists you cannot play alone. H. A.—Miss Lucy Rushton was the first manageress of the New York Theatre.

DEAD BALL.—Yes.

THE SUMMER RESORTS will soon be in full blast, and many an unlucky sojourner will blast the hotel proprietors for the lack of comfort nearly always noticeable at such places. Pretty waiter boys are already beginning to reap a rich harvest by confining their attentions to those who pay them liberally, and letting guests severely alone who do not come down with the sine qua non. Indefatigable clerks, who are lightning calculators by-the-by, are figuring things so nicely as to squeeze a day and a half out of a day, and dovetailing two dinners in a man's bill when he had but one. How they do it ignorant guests have never been able to learn; all they know about it is that it is done. But all is fair in love or war, it is said, and as a season at our fashionable watering places lasts but six weeks, hotel proprietors and all connected with them must make hay while the sun shines, and reap a golden harvest while the opportunity offers.

A MUSICAL CONVENTION was held in Philadelphia during the past week, and, what is somewhat remarkable, although each delegate had his separate crotchet, and each looked upon himself as a semi-brave, there was very little discord manifested; in fact, harmony seemed to be uppermost in the minds of all, and the proceedings were brought to a successful finale.

IF THE NEW five per cent U. S. bond is so difficult to set afloat, what is to become of the proposed three and four per cent? When money can find employment at the legal rates of six and seven per cent., it is not an easy matter to induce capitalists to invest at a lower rate. We guess that the Secretary will have to be satisfied with his five-twenties.

STORM SIGNALS.—"Our Jim's" barometer has fallen since our last, and squally weather and a "heavy wet" are the probabilities. The low temper-ature noticed in him a few days since has given place to a "high" pressure, and the conditions are favorable for a severe local storm at his boarding house.

THE WALL STREET BROKERS who had their pockets filled with "Rocks," on June 21st, went to pieces on Rock Island. Some of them have been singing, ever since the catastrophe, "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother."

IT DOES NOT FOLLOW that the Athletic nine is a fizzle because their first base man is a Fisler.

WHAT ails the Collector of Sitka? He is seizing all the malt liquors that reach there.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

ATHLETIC vs. BOSTON.

THE ATHLETICS WIN—SCORE 20 6.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

The return game between the Athletics, of Philadelphia, and the Boston Club was played on Monday afternoon, June 26th, on the ground of the former, in the presence of nearly 5,000 people. The weather was delightful, and the game, of course, the only redeeming feature being the good batting of the Athletics.

Harry Wright pitched slows in the last four innings, only two runs were scored off his delivery, and the Athletics would have run up a larger score had not Cuthbert's ankle "doubled up" Heubel at first base thereby. Malone cannot magnificently, putting out eleven men. Remsenderfer and Gould excelled at the bat. Cuthbert's base-running on a fly-catch in the fourth inning, by which Jim Bess made came. The umpiring was strict and impartial. Below is the score:—

Boston.	R.	In.	P.O.	A.	Athletic.	R.	In.	P.O.	A.

MUTUAL vs KEKIONGA.

SIGNAL DEFEAT OF THE MUTUALS.

On June 26th about 2,000 people visited the Union grounds, L. I., in anticipation of witnessing another well earned victory for the Mutuals, especially as their opponents of the day had not only been Chicagoed by the Boston nine, but badly whipped by the Atlantics. Captain Fergusson had, however, sent the Kekiongas play in their game with the Atlantics and wisely had cut his full nine—Smith one of them. The Kekiongas also replaced their catcher, Lennon, in his position, but did not have their battery, Mincher and Craver. They were in splendid train for play, however, and came very near doing that to the Mutuals which the Bostons had done to them.

THE GAME

began at 3.10 P. M., with the Mutuals at the bat. Pearce led off with a safe hit, but the next three strikers retired in succession. On the other side the two first strikers were put out as they came to the bat, and after Foran had earned his base, the third was put out without a run.

In the second innings the Mutuals retired in one, two, three order; four strikers going to the bat on the other side without a run.

In the third innings, after the two first strikers had retired, Pearce hit safe for his base, but Smith struck a little grounder to Mills, and Pearce was caught out. On the other side Kelly opened with a ball to Start, which was badly muffed, and, by two passed balls he got round to third, and, by Williams' aid, he hit Kelly record a run—first blood for Kekiongas.

In the fourth innings Start opened with a safe hit, and the Mutes thought that the ice was broken at last; but, as before, the next three strikers were prettily fielded out and Start was left.

In the fifth innings neither side scored a run, Wolters having his base given him on called balls and Foran his by an error of the umpire, who decided Foran as "not out" because the ball Start held and sounded him with was knocked out of Start's hands. (Read Sec. 3 of Rule 4th, Mr. Chapman.) The error did not benefit the Fort Wayne side, luckily.

In the 6th innings the Mutuals were splendidly caught out in one, two, three order by Leonard and Kelly. On the other side in this innings, after Lennon had upped out, Casey hit safe for his base and took his second by sharp running on Armstrong's hit to Smith. The latter being put out, Donnelly then hit safely to left field, and by Hatfield's high throw to home Casey got in and Donnelly made his third. Kelly then popped up a high ball which Wolters dropped, and by Williams' two base hit Donnelly and Kelly got home. Three runs scored with none earned.

In the seventh innings it was again one, two, three, out, on both sides, Armstrong making two splendid catches and Mathews a fine stop from a hot ball; this little light-weight pitcher facing the music in the pluckiest style imaginable, besides pitching with great judgment.

Wolters opened play in the eighth innings, and again was sent to first on called balls, Mathews thinking that the safest thing to do. He was forced out at second, and out for Carey's bad throw to Foran, there would have been two out, instead, however Patterson had a life given him, and getting to third he came home on Pearce's high hit to Kelly, Patterson running in after the catch was made. Smith was next, and for a bad muff of Goldsmith's would have been third out. By the error, however, Smith secured his base, and by an over-pitch of Matthews got round to 3rd, and the ball sirking Start's bat and glancing off, he came home. On all such occurrences as this the umpire is justified in calling the ball foul and thereby stopping base running. Start then had his base given him on called balls, and by Hatfield's high ball, which Kelly ran in well for but failed either to catch or to stop, Start got in. Here were three scratched runs, and it looked as if the Mutuals would receive their first lead after all, but Ferguson's ball—hit left handed—was well fielded by Foran and the innings ended. On the other side, though Carey got to his base, the ball was in Start's hands before he got there, but as it was not held long enough a life was given him, as Carey worked his way round well, he finally came in on Ferguson's muff of Kelly's ball. This was the last run scored by the Kekiongas.

In the ninth innings the two first strikers were put out in the order of taking the bat, and then Wolters came in to the rescue; but once more had to go to first on called balls and therefore had no chance for a "big hit." Patterson was the next, and, as he had done nothing before, all thought the Mutes were gone up; but Patterson hit for two bases and sent Wolters to third under great excitement. A good hit now would redeem things, and when Pearce came to the bat the game was thought to be safe, as Dick had done the best batting in the game. Pearce, however, hit a fair one to Matthews, who faced the rifle shot beautifully, and as Foran held the ball at first, the Mutuals bared their heads to be gracefully scalped by the western Indians, and it was all over. The Fort Wayne side added nothing to their score in their ninth innings, and the game ended in a glorious victory for the Kekiongas, which fully compensated for their Atlantic defeats. The game was well umpired by Chapman and very quickly played. The score:—

A TIE GAME IN CALIFORNIA.

On the occasion of the annual excursion of the California Rifles to the city of Vallejo, a very exciting, and perhaps the most closely contested game of base ball of the season, was played at the splendid ball ground of the above-named city, between the Crescent Club, of San Francisco, the champion junior club of the state (they having received an invitation from the company to accompany the excursion), and the Vallejo Club, of Vallejo, a senior club, and the best in that city. At the close of the nine innings the game stood even, both sides having made an equal number of runs. A tenth innings was played with the same result, neither side having made any runs. At the end of the tenth innings, it being rather late and the company having to return to the city, it was agreed to stop the game. The Crescents expect to play the Vallejo Club again, when another good game may be expected. The score:—

DUSENBURY vs. S. K. FOWLER.

At Hoboken, on June 20th, a nine made up of employees at Dusenbury's carriage-works, in the Bowery, met the S. K. Fowler Club, composed of athletic young men who earn their livelihood by making receptacles for those who have "shuffled off this mortal coil," which resulted in a victory for the Dusenburys—not altogether to their superior play, says a correspondent, but to the partial and frequently improper decisions of the umpire, a Mr. Oates, said to belong to the Eckfords. As an instance, he says:—"The Fowlers were at the bat; the batsman struck a ball, which went straight up in the air, and, in falling, the catcher and pitcher tried to take it on the fly, but missed and let it roll some distance. Consequently the man made his base, as well as the men on second and third. After that he cried "foul ball." I should have mentioned that the ball struck full ten paces in front of the batsman. A number of such cases occurred. We append the score:—

HAYMAKERS vs. KEKIONGAS.

We regret to be called upon to record a dispute between two of the leading clubs of the professional fraternity on a subject which presents a new point to be considered by the committee of rules of the two associations next fall, viz.: that of deciding whether a ripped ball is not a ball unfit for use in a match game. In cricket, when the ball is injured it is the custom to submit it to the umpires, and if they decide it unfit for further use a new ball has to be forthwith furnished. This should be one of the rules in base ball. In regard to the case in this match we present below the report of our Troy correspondent—and on the other side have to state that the Fort Wayne Club left a ball in our possession which they state was the ball played with, and with the exception that the thread of the seams is a little loose in two places we see nothing to call for a new ball in the appearance of the one left at our office. Still, whether it was ripped or not ripped, the Kekiongas had no right to refuse to play, they having the judiciary committee of the professional association to fall back upon to right them if any unfairness was shown in the match, and that, by the way, is the only judiciary committee the professional clubs are bound to be governed by. The report is as follows:—

On Monday, June 19th, the Kekiongas, of Fort Wayne, put in an appearance on the Haymaker grounds, at Troy, for the purpose of playing the Haymakers a game of ball. Game was called at 3½ o'clock, with Mr. Isaac Leroy as umpire, and the Haymakers at the bat. Mr. Ed. Tighe was secured by the Haymakers to catch for them, but "Ed." would have no use but Mr. Leroy. The ball was furnished by the "Kekie" (it was one of the most miserable specimens for base ball that was ever thrown on to a field). There was no regulation ball on hand, and the umpire decided that the ball the Haymakers used in a game on the previous Saturday, in Chicago. On the commencement of the seventh innings the ball was ripped so badly that the captain of the Haymakers passed it to the umpire, stating that it was unfit for use. The umpire decided that the ball was ripped to such an extent that another ball be thrown in. The "Kekie" not having a new one on hand, the Haymakers presented one of "Ryan's" dead white balls. The "Kekie" refused to play with it. Mr. Craver then told them they might throw in any ball—even the one they had played or practiced with—still they refused to play with any ball but the one they had been playing with. Mr. Fite stood at the batting for the ball to be pitched to him, and after waiting some fifteen minutes after the time required in rule seven, section third, called the game in favor of the Haymakers, nine to nothing, for the reason of the Kekiongas refusing to play with a new ball, the old one being ripped. The action of Mr. Lennon, the captain of the Kekiongas, in appealing to the crowd of spectators for favors, asking them whether the ball was ripped or not, was very much out of character as a professional ball player. The whole thing simply resolved itself on this one point: Is an umpire to be sustained and supported in his decisions on the field? If the umpire rules wrongly, then let the club feeling aggrieved appeal to the judiciary committee and have the thing properly settled. But they ought not to take the law and the game into their own hands and do as they think is right; if they do we will not be able to get many good men to umpire games. In 1865 the Haymakers left the field at Cincinnati because they thought themselves aggrieved by the decisions of the umpire, a case parallel to this exactly, and what did they gain? Simply nothing but a bad name. Such actions as these must be stopped or the game is gone as a pleasure. The Kekiongas refused to give the Haymakers the ball, and carried it away with them, notwithstanding the umpire's decision. Below we append the score by innings:—

First Innings.—Mcgeary opened the game by sending a short one to third; he saved his first, stole second and took third on a ball, the pitcher stepping over the line every time he delivered a ball. York struck a high one to second and retired. Flowers fouled out to Williams. Flynn sent a beauty over right field. McGeary home. "Clip" to second. King closed the innings by flying out to Mincher in left. Flyn left.....Williams fouled out to McGeary. Matthews flied out to Pike. Foran next took the bat amid cheers of the crowd, sending a beauty down centre; he went to first on three balls, Flynn forcing to second. Simon also took first on balls, leaving all the bases full. Carey closed the innings, however, by sending a daisy to Flowers, who fielded it to Craver in time to cut Lennon off.

2. McMullen flied out to Donnelly in right. Pike sent a liner over first. Bellan hit a beauty over right centre. Pike third. Bellan second. Craver struck at the first ball and flyed out to Carey. McGeary sent a hot one to short, which went through Goldsmith's legs, and Pike and Bellan, with whom York closed the innings by retiring at first on a short hit to Carey.—Two runs. Carey went to first on a short hit to left; stole second and third. Mincher fouled out to McGeary; well taken. Donnelly struck out. Kelley went to first on three balls. Williams again closed for a blinder by flying out to King.

3. Flowers fouled out to Lennon, Flynn to Williams and King to Lennon. First blunder for the "Mutes."..... Matthews struck to McMullin and retired on first. Foran struck to Craver, who splendidly fielded him out at first. Goldsmith flyed out to Flowers; beautiful catch. Third blinder.

4. McMullen fouled out to Lennon. Pike flied out to Williams. Bellan fouled out to Lennon..... Lennon went to first on an error by Flowers. Carey struck to Bellan, who fielded to Craver. (Rather a fine chance for a double play was lost by Craver not holding the ball; two men on bases.) Mincher flied out to Craver. Donnelly to first on three balls; bases all full. Kelley hit a beauty past first, sending two men home. Williams retired on first by Flowers to Flynn. Matthews struck to Flowers, and Kelley home on same play. Foran sent a low one to York. Matthews home. Goldsmith struck out to Bellan. Foran out on second. Side out. Five runs, all on errors.

5. Craver retired at first by Carey to Foley; McGeary to first on a hit to second, and stole second; York fly to Kelley, out; Flowers fly to Foran, out.....Goldsmith out on first by Craver to Flynn; Lennon fly to Craver; Carey out on fly to Mullin to Flynn.

6. Flynn fly to Kelley; King fly to Mincher—fine catch; McMullin fly to Matthews..... Mincher fly to Flynn; Donnelly out on first by McMullin to Flynn; Kelly to first on three balls, on third on an overthrow; Williams in on an underthrow by Bellan; Kelly home. Matthews closed the innings by going out on a foul fly to McGeary. Game called:—

OLYMPIC vs. ECKFORD.

The Olympic nine, of Washington, played their first game with the Eckfords, upon the Union ground, at Williamsburg, L. I., on Friday, June 23d. The exhibition they gave of their skill in the field on the previous day, in their contest with the Mutuals, should have assured a much larger attendance, but the fifty cent admission fee is fast killing the popular interest in the game, anyway so far as any other than a positively first class contest is concerned. As it was, not more than three hundred persons were present. The day was a delightful one, and both nines were on the ground in good time. After some little discussion between the captains of the nines, Mr. Hatfield was selected as umpire, and he quickly put the game in trim, both pitchers, particularly Martin, whose erratic style of delivery allowed five men to go to their bases on called balls during the game. Almost fifty balls were pitched by Martin in the course of the game. Play commenced at ten minutes past three, with the Olympics at the bat. The game, although extremely well played on the part of the Olympic nine, was so completely one sided that it made it very uninteresting to the lookers on. As is generally the case, the Eckfords opened the game well, but they could not keep it up, indulging occasionally in wild throwing. They ought to have made a much better exhibition than they did, but it must be admitted Martin's pitching was not at all to the mark, and he lost the game. Leonard's play at second base, and Berthrong's at left field, was excellent, and Glenn's play at the bat was very successful. On the Eckford side, Gurney and Crandell appeared well in the field, but the former should exercise a little more care in throwing the balls to the in-field. The following is the score:—

THE ROCKFORDS IN CINCINNATI.

FOREST CITY vs. LIVE OAK.

The Forest City Club, of Rockford, arrived in Cincinnati on their return from the east on the 20th, and that afternoon encountered the Live Oaks, the leading amateur club of Portsopolis. The Live Oaks have some capital players in their nine, but are unfortunate in not having practiced together, and also in not always presenting their full nine. In this instance they were short Wratten, their regular third base, De Hart, short-stop, and Joe Snyder, their crack old Red Stocking nine of 1868 are now in the nine, Johnson and Hoe. The latter appeared as pitcher and was quite effective. John Griffith, of the Cincinnati juniors, was selected for umpire, and filled the position creditably. The Live Oaks opened, put on the bat and scored nine runs in the first innings, of which they earned but one, the Live Oaks clearly showing the need of practice. The Live Oaks were handsomely whitewashed in their two first innings, owing to the inability of batsmen to hit Foster's hot shots, while the Forest Cities added two to their score, both earned. In the next three innings the home club did better, scoring 6 to their opponents' 12, while in the last four innings their batting visibly improved, the Rockfords adding half to their score, against four the Cincinnati club, the score ending 30 to 9. The Rockfords batted heavily and safely, home runs being credited to Fisher, Stires and Addy. At times Baldwin and Snyder were very effective, as regular as it might have been. For the Live Oaks, Brookshaw caught splendidly, cutting off every man that attempted to steal second. The latter position was elegantly played by Riley, as was short field by Langdon, who took a red hot liner in the sixth innings. Johnson made a fine one handed catch in left field. The score was as follows:—

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

PARTING.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY E. S. MARBLE.

'Tis sad to part from those we love,
'Tis sad true hearts to sever;
'Tis sad to take a last long look,
But not, we pray, forever.

'Tis sad, indeed, with hand in hand
To bid a last farewell.
'Tis sad to give a parting kiss,
As sad as death's cold knell.

'Tis sad to hear the solemn words
Come wringing at your heart,
That tell you they must separate
That never were to part.

Yet in my dreams I hear a voice
That cheers me on my way,
With loving smile and look of truth—
These words it seems to say:—

"Cheer up, young hearts, and trust to fate,
A bright day is in store,
When you shall meet as one on earth.
To part—no—nevermore."

RAPE.

At the Supreme Criminal Court, Boston, Mass., on June 19th, the trial of two indictments against one Richard Walsh, driver of a private carriage in the Highland District, was heard. The principal charge was that he attempted to rape Julia E. Corcoran, the other alleging an assault upon her friend, Susan A. Tolman, both offences being committed at the same time and place, to wit, in the carriage house where Walsh was employed, on the night of the 25th of April. Walsh had been driving his employer's family to a party, after which he drove round to No. 8 Lenox street, the house where the Corcoran and Tolman girls boarded, and with whom he had a slight previous acquaintance. He took into the carriage three girls, having already with him a young man named McCarty. The five rode down Washington street a distance, when McCarty got out, Walsh agreeing to take him up on the way back. The drive was continued to Harvard street, where a turn back was made, when the girls were left at their street, and Walsh went hunting for his friend McCarty. He soon found him, when the latter got in again. Shortly afterward they again overhauled the girls, this time there being but two, Julia and Susan. The party of four then drove out to Roxbury, through several streets, to Walnut avenue. The Tolman girl says she protested against go ng, but was hushed by Walsh, who told her it would be all right. Arriving at the stable, Walsh got out, opened the stable door, when the team passed in and he fastened the door by a string. The Corcoran girl says that he then turned down the gas, and, throwing her upon the floor, attempted to outrage her, but was prevented by the loud screaming of both the girls. While he was engaged with Julia, the Tolman girl seems to have been so terribly frightened that, for want of other means of escape, she ran to a back window and jumped out to the ground, a distance variously estimated from eight to twelve feet. Though somewhat injured she soon recovered and set up another screaming, which brought the neighbors, and she was released from the yard. The Corcoran girl says she also escaped by the window by the aid of the branch of a tree which stood near it. To meet this testimony, the defence brought McCarty and the defendant himself, who agree in the main to the first part of the transaction, though they say that the girls were anxious to go to ride; that they made no strong objection to going into the stable; that Walsh's interview with the Corcoran girl in the stable was perfectly agreeable to her, and was of that character which would be natural between a man and woman at such a place and time. Walsh positively denied using any force with her, and that he subsequently lifted her out of the window carefully, not wishing her to go by the front door, as she would be seen. McCarty appears to have got frightened by the screams of the Tolman girl and ran away about the time she jumped from the window. The case was very closely tried, and the witnesses, particularly the two girls, made a good appearance upon the stand as they told their stories. The jury took the case at adjournment and returned a verdict of guilty next morning.

THE VIBLE DIVORCE.—In the divorce suit of Gen. E. L. Viele against his wife Teresa, an application on the part of the latter for the custody of her two youngest children, was made last September, and was argued on June 10th, in the Supreme Court, of this city, before Judge Barnard. The following is his decision:—The petitioner seeks by a writ of habeas corpus to recover the possession of her two youngest children, one five, and the other seven years old. The respondent, in answer to the writ, says that the petitioner is an improper person to have the care and custody of such young children, on account of immorality. In this case, where there are five children, one of them grown up to womanhood, I should hesitate a long while before I would find the petitioner guilty of adultery, except upon the clearest and most positive testimony. I am unable, however, to find anything in the evidence submitted to me that will fix the charge of adultery upon the petitioner. A vast amount of testimony has been taken in this matter by both parties, that, in my judgment, has no bearing whatever upon the charges. I find nothing of a reliable character that shows that the petitioner is other than a kind, virtuous and affectionate mother. I deem it proper also to state that the charges made against the respondent of committing adultery with the lady named, is wholly unfounded, unjust and wicked. If parties will have divorce suits, they should confine their assaults upon the character of each other, and not go out to bring in an innocent party, and that a lady, for the purpose of injuring and blackening her character. I therefore order that the petitioner have the care and custody of the two youngest children in the petitioner. If at any time hereafter the children shall voluntarily desire to live with their father, they are at liberty so to do.

SINGULAR CASE OF DROPSY.—About the latter part of April Lizzie Carroll, a young girl twenty years of age who had been living in a boarding house, came to the house of her aunt, Mrs. Ellen Lindmann, No. 535 West Forty-second street, and to prevent the suspicions of her appearance might give rise, represented that she was suffering from dropsy. This was the more readily believed, as it was known to her relative that some time previously she had been treated at Bellevue Hospital for what was asserted to be the same disease. On the 29th ult. the body of a newly born child was found in the water closet, which the girl candidly admitted to be hers, and her condition being then very weak, she was removed to Bellevue Hospital. Next day the body of another infant was found wrapped in a cloth between the mattrass and bed on which the girl had lain, and from the appearance of the neck it was evident that it had been strangled. An inquest, presided over by Coroner Keenan, was yesterday held, and the convalescence of the mother being sufficiently established, she was arraigned and convicted of the murder of the children. The details of the testimony are unfit for publication, and the girl stated that she was born in Albany, New York, by occupation a straw sewer, and was not guilty of the charge. She was removed to the Tombs to await the action of the Grand Jury.—New York Star, June 13th.

RAVISHING TWO GIRLS.—This forenoon John E. Sliney, seventeen years old, was arrested on a warrant, on a charge of having committed the crime of rape on the person of two young girls, whose names, for obvious reasons, are withheld. The circumstances are these:—Sliney is, or professed to be, a teacher of clog dancing, and to this he has given lessons in that art, and it is alleged that on the 7th inst., one of the girls, and the youngest in question, a child of only twelve years, who was receiving instruction from him, was present in the shop alone, that he locked the door and under threats of blowing her brains out with a revolver which he exhibited, accomplished his purpose. It is asserted that the girl went there with a sister six years old, and that Sliney, in order to have a clear field, sent the youngest child away on an errand. The next day, it is stated, the older girl returned to the paint shop to get a parcel which she had left there, taking with her another girl, thirteen years of age. Sliney again produced his revolver, and by operating on the fears of the second girl, compelled her also to submit to his lustful embrace. A few days since the parents of the last mentioned girl noticed that she was not well, and an investigation proved that she was diseased, and her confession was what implicated Sliney. Subsequent inquiry leaves no doubt that the statement of the girl is true, and Sliney is held for trial.—Boston Herald, June 20th.

DOMESTIC INFELICITY.—A few days since a young and well to do husband, living at the West End of the Hub, entered the office of the Chief of Police and requested aid in ascertaining the whereabouts of his young wife, who had disappeared. The most that the husband could do was to give a description of his lost love and say that when last seen by himself or friends she was in company with a woman in black, whose acquaintance she had made about a month previous. The police, through means known only to themselves, soon ascertained that the lost wife had eloped with a pair of pants and somebody in them, but whether the "woman in black" was for some time a mystery. The couple, it finally turned out, went to New York and put up at the Brandreth House as "Irving West and wife." After remaining there three days the wife became repentant, and with her paramour returned to Boston and put up at the West End, where the police found them a day or two since. The husband was notified and had an interview with his wife. He found her manifesting great contrition, and, says the Boston Herald of June 20th, "being very magnanimous he forgave her, took her back to his heart, the reconciliation was made perfect, and now every thing is lovely and the oft quoted bird maintains a lofty attitude."

MARRYING FOR MONEY.—Thomas Wright desired one of this city's belles to marry him. She said that he must first give her a mortgage on his property. This he declined to do, but they finally came to an agreement that he should give her a note for $5,000. Then she married him. They soon quarreled and ultimately separated. She sued on the note and the referee found in her favor. The husband appealed and the Supreme Court, General Term, on June 23d, though divided, affirmed the judgment. Judge Cardozo, giving the opinion of the majority, holds that the consideration of the promise of marriage, followed by the fulfilment, is sufficient, and that whatever may have been the old law, under the recent statutes giving a wife independent rights in her property her right of action was not extinguished by her coverture. Whether her action should have been at law or on the equity side of the court he holds immaterial. Judge Barnard, dissenting, thinks that the consideration did not arise, and, therefore, the contract was not completed until after the marriage, when contracts between the plaintiff and defendant would have been null.

DIVORCE AGAINST DAVIDGE JR.—On the 5th of March, 1868, Miss Helene M. Walton was married to Edward T. Davidge, son of Wm. Davidge, the popular comedian. The name of that marriage is a daughter named Helen Elizabeth, now nearly three years of age. The relations of the parents have not been pleasant. Mrs. Davidge had reason to suppose that her husband was not faithful to his marital vows. Mrs. Davidge thereupon entered a complaint against her husband in the Brooklyn City Court, praying for an absolute divorce and demanding the custody of the daughter. The case was referred by Judge Pierrepont to George W. Chebel, who, having heard the testimony, reported in favor of granting the divorce as applied for. A decree of absolute divorce was accordingly entered yesterday by Judge Thompson's order.—N. Y. Sun, June 24th.

CHANGED HIS MIND.—The case of Welch vs. Welch was heard on June 17th in the divorce court, this city, on a motion for alimony and council fees. They were married April 26th, 1870, in this city. On August 14th, 1870, the defendant was delivered of a child, the paternity of which he claimed to a third party. The plaintiff alleges in his affidavit that the birth of the child was the first knowledge she received of the inchastity of his wife, and that he therefore left her and instituted the present proceedings for a divorce. She says in her answer, that before they were married she told him the story of her life and of her being enceinte; that he said he freely forgave her; that at the time of the birth of the child he said he would continue to live with her if she would place the child in charitable care, keeping, which she did, and that he lived with her two weeks afterwards and then abandoned her. The court denied the motion.

BONES GETS ENAMELED.

INTERLOCUTOR.—There is a peculiar expression upon your usually serene countenance this evening, Mr. Bones—a certain je ne scais quoi that I never saw there before. Anything up?

BONES.—Up? Yes, it's all up. I don't know what you mean by your Geniuse squose, but if she's one dat's dyed in de wool and de culler won't run, I'm her brudder.

INT.—You are sardonic, sir.

BONES.—Dat what dey call it. Den I'll tell you de reason. I've been 'lammoned.

INT.—Lammoned, sir! I suppose you mean enamcled.

BONES.—Yes, dat's it! You see, like a good many people dat goes to auctions, I got dissatisfied wid my lot, and conclude dat I'd go to a 'nameler and git my face painted. De fust I called upon was a woman. "What color will you hab it?" said she; "shall it be jet black, or pure white, green, blue, or yaller, or neutral, or fresh pink?" "I'll go the dead white," said I, "like de Mister Fox in de pantomile." I went behind a curtain wid her, and presently I com out and look myself in de glass. "How you like dat?" says she. And I laffed; I did'nt know myself from General Grant or Hall Columbus; and my face—well, it looked like a bowl of milk wid two ripe tomatuses floating about in it. I paid my dingdate on de nail and I started for de do'; hadn't gone far up de Broadway befo' I notice de change. De gals dey look at me languishin', and says one to me, says she:—"Bubby, which way?" And a gentman wid a big diamond stepa up, and says he, holdin' out a ball:—"I'll bet you five dollars you can't bet what's in this." And I step into de hotel and everybody was as freezingly polite as a can of ice cream, till I ax 'em to drink, and den dey was like de same ice cream wid de fermometer at 100 in de zeroes. Well, now for business, says I, and off I starts for a situation. And I went roun' and roun,' and roun', and I met wid nuffin' but good nature and civility everywhere, but not de ghost of a show for a livin'. And I let a week go by, and I begin to git hungry, and so I screwed up my courage to de "stickin' plaster pint," as Shakspeel says, and I went to Horris Greeley, and says I:—"Ole Philos', I want a show to git a livin." "Take a broad axe and a chest of carpinter's tools and git into de wilderness and begin de world anew." "But, I want a show," said I." "Damn it," said he, "I ain't in de show bis'ness; git!" And wid dat he showed me de do'. Den I went back mournful to de lammoner, and says I, pointin' to my face:—"O, give me back my own face again, won't you, say? I'se jus' about sick o' dis foolin'. Take off your dam lammel and give me a box of stove-polish, quick."

INT.—That accounts then for the milk in your cocoanut. And now patent leathers will favor us with one of his latest:—

WHEN THE DAY FADES.

When the day fades with its pleasures,
And hearts to wild music are beating,
While gamesters grow rich o'er their treasures
And lovers fond vows are repeating;
While others in wine and its luremenis,
The joys of the revel delight,
Let me from the throng stray unnoticed
And give to the Muse my thoughts light.

Chorus.—Soft falls the light on the billow,
Angels keep watch round thy pillow,
Soon shall the rose crown the willow,
Rest in a slumbers—good night!

Brave are the sunbeams at morning,
Then life is a transparent river,
Gay flowers its margin adorning
And grace hanging o'er it forever;
Soft thoughts come when in music bewilder'd the senses
As we sail with the landscape in sight,
The present all pain recompenses;
Why brood 'neath the summer noon's light?

Chorus.—Soft falls the light, etc.

Never a thought of time wasted,
Never a care for the morrow;
While there's a joy yet untasted
We'll live and we'll laugh away sorrow,
Although the waves may run mountains high,
Where the tide meets the sea in its flight,
And dark eyes with tears may be streaming
That are gayest and brightest to-night.

Chorus.—Soft falls the light on the billow, etc.

SWEET JERUSHA GAY.

BY DARBY O'GAFF.

I'll tell you of a charmer fair,
With bright blue eyes and golden hair,
A laughing, merry little elf,
And I fell in love with her myself.
For she was so pretty,
So charming, so witty,
I thought it was a pity
That she couldn't be mine through life.
The first time that I met her
I tried so hard to get her,
I wrote a letter
Asking her to be my little wife.
Chorus—But she said:—Oh dear, she couldn't,
Yet she did not mean she wouldn't,
And I'd no idea she shouldn't
Be mine before the end of day.
O, she's a darling fairy, so winsome and so airy,
And her name is sweet Jerusha Gay.

When out walking one afternoon,
Among the roses in sweet June,
And as I lingered on my way
I met with sweet Jerusha Gay.
Then of course I walked beside her
And no pleasure I denied her
Till I began to chide her
For her way of using me;
But she said she was only joking,
Which I thought was anything but provoking,
For my heart was almost broken
At the thought of her refusing me.
Chorus—But she said:—Oh dear, &c.

One eve she invited me to tea,
Which made me happy as I could be.
Then after tea we took a walk
And of our union we did talk,
And she said with such a smile,
In such a charming style,
Just wait a little while
And then I'll be yours by and by.
O, she's a darling girl,
And such glossy, flowing curl
Puts my heart all in a whirl
Spite of all I can do or try.
Chorus—For she said she guessed she could,
And I always thought she would,
And I knew if she only should
I'd be happy every day.
O, she's a darling fairy, this girl I'm going to marry,
And her name is sweet Jerusha Gay.

MILLVILLE, MASS., June 7th, 1871.

PEG WOFFINGTON, on her first appearance in England, had the following lines addressed to her on her playing Sylvia, in the "Recruiting Officer":—

"When first in petticoats you trod the stage,
Our sex with love you fired—your own with rage;
In breeches next so well you played the cheat,
The pretty fellow and the rake complete;
Each sex were then with different passions moved,
The men grew envious and the women loved!"

THEATRE TRURO—ENGLAND.

BY PERMISSION OF THE WORSHIPFUL THE MAYOR.

In consequence of the universal applause with which the admired drama of "The Slave" was received on its first representation, it will be repeated on an early evening, of which due notice will be given. Sheridan's Tragic Play of "Pizarro" will be performed in the course of a few nights. The grand drama of "The Miller and His Men" will be shortly produced. New scenery is also preparing for the favorite melo-drama of Tekeli; or, The Siege of Montgatz.

ON MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 17TH, 1821,

Will be performed Shakespeare's Tragedy of

MACBETH, KING OF SCOTLAND.

This immortal play, founded on the superstitious narratives of a dark age, replete with "the wonderful and the wild," contains considerable character, passion and incident; many beautiful passages, particularly the soliloquies, attest the superior hand of its author, and it is deservedly esteemed as the opening of the English drama. EDMUND KEAN AS A SOMERSAULTIST.—While the late Edmund Kean was once rehearsing on the Birmingham stage, a conversation ensued regarding the merits of the two rival tragedians, Kean and Kemble, and after all present had expressed pretty unequivocally their likes and dislikes Kean wound up the agreeable colloquy by the following piece of dexterity: "I have been told," said he, striking into the conversation, "that most people imagine they cannot praise me without detracting in some measure from the fair fame of John Kemble; this is a mistake; let every tub stand upon its own bottom, say I. John Kemble was an actor, a very great actor; but however great an actor he was, I could show you one thing he could not do." So saying, Kean, with the elasticity of a harlequin, cut a somersault, to the no small amusement of the histrionic critics.

THE TURF.

The Ascot Races.

The meeting annually held on Ascot heath, has, ever since its establishment occupied a position inferior to none other upon the turf calendar of England, embracing several very important races and being especially patronized by the aristocracy, headed by royalty itself. This year the meeting was held under rather unfavorable auspices, as far as the weather was concerned, a few sharp showers falling upon the opening day and the air being decidedly cold throughout. This, however, did not have the effect of noticeably affecting the attendance, which, especially on the Cup Day, appeared fully as great as during any previous year. As on the opening day, the royal cortege consisted of five carriages, the first containing the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Grand Duke Vladimer, of Russia, and Princess Teck, while in the others were seated the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Teck, Prince Edward, of Saxe-Weimar, Prince John, of Gluckburg, the Duke of Cambridge, &c. Underneath will be found details of the principal events of the meeting:—

There were six other starters. Betting, 11 to 2 each agst King of the 2 agst Cleveland, 5 to 1 agst Rhipponden, 11 to 2 each agst King of the Forest and Bothwell, 10 to 1 agst Sterling, 14 to 1 agst Digby Grand and 20 to 1 agst Pennifless. King of the Forest ran in front for a dozen strides, when Digby Grand drew clearly to the head of affairs, and before they had gone three hundred yards Cleveland drew into second place, the King then lying third, with Pennifless, Bothwell, Noblesse and Hannah next, the last two being Sterling and Rhipponden. Descending the hill into the Swinley Bottom, Cleveland raced up to Digby Grand's heels, and Maidment having let out Rhipponden, he now went on third, before King of the Forest, Bothwell and Pennifless, while Sterling, Noblesse and Hannah brought up the rear in company. Approaching the Old Course, Cleveland took the lead from Digby Grand, and at the brick kilns, where the pair were perfectly level, the others closed, and, with Noblesse and Hannah both becoming prominent, Bothwell, on the inside, was, perhaps, the last to round the bend into the straight. Cleveland and Digby Grand continued together until below the distance, when they simultaneously succumbed, and Rhipponden, on the outside only enjoyed the command for a few additional strides, as King of the Forest came in front in the centre, with Hannah between the pair and Sterling in their track. Dangerous though the latter looked for a few strides, he died away opposite the royal enclosure, where Bothwell's final rush with a bad place on the inside was ended, although Rhipponden and the Duke struggled stoutly to the finish, King of the Forest pulled through cleverly from his old opponent by half a length, with Hannah beaten a head

Trotting at Fleetwood Park.

A SWEEPSTAKES RACE AND A MATCH AGAINST TIME.

On June 21st, two trotting races came off at Fleetwood Park, Morrisania, N. Y. The day was favorable and the track in fine condition after the rain of the previous day. The first race was for a sweepstakes of $1,000, mile heats best three in five, in harness, between five fast road horses. The second was a match against time; Mr. James Brown backing his road team Dandy Jim and Edwin Forest to trot one mile in 2.50 for $2,500, three heats to be allowed, and the team to have another horse to accompany them if desired.

The entries for the sweepstakes were Thomas Trimble's gr g Grey Eagle, F. Fleming's g g Honest Tom, Mr. Roden's s g Sorrel Dan, Dan Mace's bik g Black Hawk, and John Murphy's s g Sorrel Jake. Roden, Murphy and Mace were in Boston, and the horses they entered were driven by other parties, who were assistants on the track. Sorrel Dan was made the favorite, and he sold for as much as all the others combined; Sorrel Jake and Honest Tom being next in demand. In the first heat, after several failures, they got the word, the favorite being last from the score, and going in an unsteady, stilty manner. Sorrel Jake went to front at the turn and led two lengths at the quarter, with Black Hawk on a run, Grey Eagle next and Honest Tom fourth. The latter became second on the backstretch, and although he was six lengths behind Sorrel Jake at the half mile pole, he trotted so fast and steadily on the last half mile that Sorrel Jake only beat him a short half length at the finish; Grey Eagle was third, and the other two so far behind that they would have been shut out if there had been any distance in the race. Time, 2.50. Sorrel Jake now became the favorite, selling in pools for $70; Honest Tom, $25, and the field $15. As in the previous heat, Sorrel Jake led from start to finish, with Honest Tom second and Grey Eagle third, and they finished in these positions, Jake winning by a length. Time, 2:48¼. There was now no betting, except on second place, for which Honest Tom was the favorite. Sorrel Jake went off with the lead, Tom second, and opened so wide a gap on the back-stretch that he was a dozen lengths in front at the half-mile pole. He jogged home an easy winner by six lengths in 2:35¾. Grey Eagle being second and Sorrel Dan third. Honest Tom broke down badly near the half-mile po e, and it was with difficulty he was got off the track. Summary:—

FLEETWOOD PARK, June 21st.—Stakes of $1,000; mile heats, three in five, in harness.

J. Murphy's g g Sorrel Jake	1	1	1
F. Fleming's s g Honest Tom	3	2	5
T. Trimble's g g Grey Eagle	2	3	2
M. Roden's s g Sorrel Dan	5	4	3
D. Mace's bik g Black Hawk	4	5	4

Time.	2:50;	2:48¼;	2:35¾.

The match against time then commenced, Mr. Brown's team being driven by Allcott, who weighed some 190 lbs., or 40 lbs. over the regulation weight. The first mile was trotted in 2:56½, the grey horse making two or three breaks. On the second essay the team trotted a little faster, but only put 2:57 on the record. In the third trial, Allcott did what he ought to have done before; put on a fast trotting pace, and was seen no more in the final essay. The 2:51 effect was soon seen, for they trotted the first quarter very fast and the half mile in 1:23, after making a bad break on the back-stretch. The grey horse broke again on the last quarter, and as the team went under the string the timers' watches showed 2:51; thus losing the match and money by one second. The owner of the team is satisfied they can accomplish the feat in 2:50, the time proposed, and is willing to make the same match over again. The fact of their being badly managed and driven lost the race. The match was originally for $500 a side, but on the day was raised to $2,500. The betting before the first trial was $100 to $40 on the team, but after their first failure, $100 to $40 on time was current, and before the final trial $100 to $25 was freely offered.

SAME DAY.—Match against time; 2:50 to be beaten; stakes $2,500; three trials allowed.

AQUATIC.

NEW YORK YACHT CLUB'S REGATTA.

This pioneer yachting organization of the United States held its annual regatta on Thursday, June 22d, and although as a sailing contest it has been surpassed, in consequence of the light winds preventing the larger and noblest yachts from displaying their qualities, as a spectacle of nautical grandeur it has never been eclipsed in New York Bay. A brief digression respecting the club's origin and our report will be resumed. On the 30th July, 1844, there assembled on board the schooner yacht Gimcrack (a small craft of 28 tons) off the Battery in this city, the following named gentlemen for the purpose of forming a club for the fostering of the pastime of yachting:—John C. Stevens, yacht Gimcrack; Hamilton Wilkes, yacht Spray; William Edgar, yacht Cygnet; John C. Jay, yacht La Coquille; George L. Schuyler, yacht Dream; James M. Waterbury, yacht Minna; Louis A. Depau, yacht Mist; James Rodgers, yacht Ida, and George B. Rollins, yacht Petrel. In July, 1845, the club held an informal regatta, but it was not until June 6, 1848, that the first annual regatta was sailed. They have been continued ever since with the exception of the summer of 1861, when, in consequence of the civil war, the club, by resolution, omitted it. How humble its beginning in 1844, and what a contrast to its progress, power and influence in 1871. Then scarcely known beyond the Atlantic's waters laving Sandy Hook; now its club's signal is saluted and honored all over the globe wherever commerce has a resting place.

The weather was delightful, and although the sun was obscured in the early morning for several hours, at about 11 A. M. it burst forth in all the glory and intensity proverbial to June. The wind at this time was from the southeast, and blowing only at the rate of five knots, which had the effect to elevate the hopes of the skippers of the sloops, and to depress the spirits of those who were interested in the first class, or "big schooners." As some large new yachts were to make their début on the occasion, and as the schooners Wanderer, Rambler, Columbia and the sloops Peerless, Vixen and Ariadne, the prevalence of calm was a great drawback to the day's enjoyment. The programme consisted of three races, to be sailed at the same time, and for prizes of more value than ever were competed for, in one day, in this country. The first was for the regular club prizes; one for schooners valued at $250; one for first class sloops, $150, and one for the second class sloops, $100; to be sailed for according to the rules of the club. The second was for the challenge cups offered by Mr. Bennett, one for schooners valued at $1,000, and one for sloops of $600, to be sailed for according to the rules of the club, with allowance of time, the winners to hold the same for thirty days after the race without liability to challenge, after which they are to be held subject to the deed of gift in possession of the club. The third race was for two subscription cups—contributed by the club—one for schooners, valued at $600, and one for sloops, $400—to be sailed for according to the rules of the club, but without allowance of time, and to be open to yachts of all American clubs of not less than fifteen tons measurement.

THE COURSE

was from a stake boat off the lower steamboat landing, at Staten Island, to and around the Southern Spit, passing it to the eastward, and south, thence to the light-ship, rounding it to the northward and eastward, and returning over the same course, passing to the east of all the buoys on the west bank, and to the westward of the home stake-boat. The following were entered, the yachts being permitted to enter for either or all of the races on payment of the entrance fee of twenty-five dollars:—

BASE BALL.

MUTUAL vs. OLYMPIC.

A FINE DISPLAY AT THE BAT.

On Thursday, June 22d, the Mutual Club played their first game this season with the Olympic Club, of Washington, and the weather being delightfully cool and pleasant, and a fine contest being anticipated, the result was a very numerous attendance of spectators, nearly 4,000 people being present.

The Mutuals were unable to present their full nine, as Smith was still disabled from a sprained ankle; but they played the same nine which had defeated the Cleveland, Boston and Athletic Clubs, and so went into the game pretty confident of success. The Olympics had their full nine out, and hence another such a display was anticipated as that made in the game with the Boston nine in May. But that was one of those exceptional affairs, seen only once or twice in a season.

The record of championship contests this season gives the Mutual Club a very decided lead in the race for the legal whip pennant. They began the season with a most noteworthy victory in Troy, in May, and it is very likely they will close the month of June the conquerors of every professional club nine which has entered for the professional championship, as they have only one more club to encounter, viz., the Kekiongas, of Fort Wayne. Their record of victories up to June 22d, stands as follows:—

Mutual vs. Haymaker	24	3	Mutual vs. Athletic	9	6
Mu ual vs. Rockford	7	3	Mutual vs. Olympic	17	4
Mutual vs. Chicago	9	5
Mutual vs. Cleveland	10	6	Totals	88	30
Mutual vs. Boston	9	5

Their only defeat was in their second game with the Haymaker Club, which the latter won by a score of 25 to 10, this defeat, probably, benefitting them more than it did any harm, as it taught them the fallacy of supposing that any club could put a nine in the field that was invincible.

The two clubs on Thursday were fortunate in securing the services of one of the most impartial and competent umpires we have seen act in the position this season, Mr. Lennon showing a knowledge of the spirit, as well as letter o' the laws, and a promptitude and sound judgment only too rarely displayed by umpires.

THE GAME.

The game began at 3.15 P. M., with the Mutuals at the bat. Pearce opened play with a high ball to left field, which Berthrong captured, and, as Higham sent another to the same quarter, Berthrong had a chance for a more brilliant catch and received a round of applause. Start was next, and he also went into the popping-up business, Force taking his high fly prettily. The Olympics now went to the bat, and after Waterman had had a life given him on a foul tip he hit to Pearce, and Start had the ball at first before Fred. could get there. Force then hit high to Eggler's district, and, of course got tired, and as Mills followed this bad lead, the Olympics scored a blank, Eggler capturing both players.

In the second innings Hatfield opened at the bat, and, following the lead of the others, popped up an easy one for Hall to take and retired. Ferguson also went in for a similar "splendid hit" and met the same fate at Hall's hands, and as Mills would hit a ball to Force, he simply traveled to first base to thank his namesake for putting him out. On the other side, Allison invested in the chicken business and was sold by Mills. Glenn now came to the rescue with a safe bounder past third base and he earned his first; but, trying for two bases, he would have been put out by Higham at second easily had Hatfield thrown the ball in straight, but it came in wide, and, had not Higham been well backed up by Start, Glenn would have scored his third; as it was, he overran his base and the result was he was run out by Ferguson and Higham. Leonard then hit safe for his base, and as Brainard sent an easy ball to Higham, he ended the innings.

Eggler opened play in the third innings with a safe grounder, and, after having had two strikes called on him, he got a ball just where he wanted it, and away the ball went to centre field for three bases, thereby sending Eggler in, amidst loud applause. Patterson then hit easy to Brainard and retired at first, and Pearce's ball to Waterman went like a shot to Mills, Wolters coming in on the play —two runs earned. Higham then hit safely but he was left, as Mills fielded Start out himself, the innings closing for the two runs scored. On their side the Olympics retired in one, two, three order, the batting being just what the Mutual infielders liked to see. This left the Mutuals in the van by a score of 2 to 0, and a kind of safe feeling pervaded the Mutual betting crowd.

In the 4th innings Hatfield opened with a safe ball to third, which Waterman threw wild to Mills, and but for a fine stop by Mills the error would have been costly. Ferguson then hit to Force, and, as Hatfield started as the ball was struck, Force thought it safer to put the striker out, Hatfield thereby reaching second safely. Charley Mills then hit a ball to Leonard and retired at first, but Eggler stopped the outs with a two baser of the fair-foul kind, the most telling of all hits, and, as the next three strikers punished Brainard very prettily, the result was three earned runs, Higham closing the innings by hitting a ball to Leonard and forcing Pearce out. On the other side the Olympics again added to their growing nest of goose eggs, Pearce marking his fielding with a neat line ball catch. Things were now beginning to look sure for another New York victory, and Brainard did not seem to relish it at all.

The fifth innings was now commenced, Higham leading off with a "fair foul" bounder, always good for an earned base. Start, however, in his anxiety for a home-run—one of his failings—hit high and gave Hall an easy chance, and the "splendid hit" resulted in a neat catch. Hatfield then hit safely to right field, sending Higham to third. Ferguson now gave Force a ball which Commodore Kit muffed badly, and, what was worse, he threw wild to Mills—sending Hatfield to third and Higham home, instead of another man out. The next two strikers were then disposed of at first, Hatfield getting in in the interim, only one run being earned. On the other side, though Glenn hit safely for his base and Hall had a life given him by Higham, the side was put out before a run could be scored, the fifth innings closing with the totals at 7 to 0.

In the sixth innings the Mutuals "settled" easily into the whitewash ball, but they offset it by treating the Olympics to the same thing, Ferguson putting the side out in fine style, one throw of his to Start being a beauty.

In the seventh innings Higham led off with a safe hit, and, as Start hit a hot bounder to right field, Higham went to third and Joe to his second. By Hatfield's hit to Force, Higham was easily disposed of by Allison at home base, Joe taking his third. Ferguson then hit one of those slow balls from the hands of the bat which induced Mills to leave his base to get it, and Leonard also ran up for the same purpose, but neither of them secured the ball and Ferguson made his base, he earning it, as Mills could not have got back in time had he secured the ball; Mills then hit safely to right field, and, as Glenn threw the ball in to Waterman out of reach, both Hatfield and Ferguson came in. Eggler then batted securely for his base, and after Force had disposed of Wolters at first, Waterman made a bad muff and a wide throw, and, by these errors, two more runs were scored, Leonard finally catching out Pearce and closing the innings with the totals at 12 to 0. On the other side Allison opened by fouling out, but Glenn had a life given him by Start on a low throw by Ferguson, and by Leonard's good hit Glenn got to third, and, as Brainard hit a high long ball to Patterson, before the ball could be returned in after the catch Glenn got in, thereby securing the first run for the Olympics by a scratch, as Hall was put out a pretty throw of Mills' to Higham. This left the totals at 12 to 1, with victory for the Mutuals a foregone conclusion. Still the game was watched with interest, as experienced spectators at ball matches are fully aware of the fact that a club need never lose heart until the last man is put out in the last innings, and there was yet two for a surprise in the way of a rally, and one did come after all.

In the eighth innings neither side scored a run, for though Start made a base hit he was forced off at second by Hatfield's hit to Force, and on the other side Waterman after making a base hit, had a life given him at second by Higham, Hatfield making a good running catch of a foul bound in this innings.

In the ninth innings the Mutuals again drew a blank, Wolters alone earning his base, and on the other side the two first strikers were easily disposed of on the fly, the Olympics, in this game, hitting no less than sixteen high balls, which afforded chances for outs off Wolter's pitching against twelve on the other side, the Mutuals, in this game, making better hits than in any previous contest of the season, but three high balls being hit by them, on which they earned bases, the others being safe bounding or ground balls—the best hits made. In this innings, after two men had been put out, Leonard hit a high and apparently safe ball to right field, which Start tried to get, as also Higham and Patterson; but Start dropped the ball and Leonard had a life given. As Leonard hit, the Olympics began to put up their bats in the usual hurry scurry way, as if they had but ten minutes to catch a train for home; but seeing Leonard escape, they went in recklessly at the bat, and hitting the first ball within reach, two men got bases by clean hits, and, being assisted by a muff of Pearce's, no less than three runs were added to their score, Waterman also hitting safely, and getting his second by a muff of Hatfield's. In fact, things at one time began to look as if an important rally was about to be made; but Force ended the "spurt" by sending an easy ball to Higham, the game finally closing with the totals at 13 to 4 in favor of the Mutuals—the same ratio as that of the Mutual and Boston game.

The Olympic display in this game did not compare with that they made in their contest with the Boston nine, Brainard failing to pitch with the judgment he did then, neither did Force field as well. On the other side Mills' catching and Ferguson's third base play were features of the game. Wolters, too, pitched with great judgment and effect. The score:—

KEKIONGA vs. LOWELL.

The famous team from the Hoosier commonwealth set foot within the sacred limits of the Hub on Tuesday, June 20th, and on that afternoon engaged in a game with the Lowell Club, in which they had things their own way, though the pitching of Lovett had the effect of keeping their score down. At the bat the Lowells made nothing till the sixth innings, when they succeeded in getting two men on bases, and on a passed ball these two came home, which gave them all the runs they obtained during the game. On the last half of the eighth innings the game was called on account of the rain, when the score stood 10 to 2. The score:—

BOSTON vs. KEKIONGA.

A GREAT VICTORY FOR THE RED STOCKINGS.

The first game between the Boston and Kekionga Clubs was played on the grounds of the former on June 21st; and terminated in a most disastrous defeat for the Hoosiers, who laid nine goose eggs. The Boston Herald, in commenting on the play, says:—

Five minutes after the appointed time play was called by the umpire, Mort. Rogers, and the Bostons, having lost the toss, went to the bat for the first innings. Barnes got a first base hit, Birdsall took first on an error and McVey struck for two bases, bringing both in. The next three men were retired, McVey being left on second. The little K's then drew a blank, which they repeated in the next eight innings, scoring nothing in the whole game. The Red Stockings scored six in the second innings, three first base hits being made. The Kekiongas fielded poorly in this inning, a large number of unexcusable muffs occurring. After this innings, however, they toned down, and for the remainder of the game showed a good specimen of fielding ability. At the bat they showed poorly, only one first base hit being made during the whole game. The Bostons did nothing very remarkable in the batting line till the seventh innings, when four first base hits were made, and one second baser. A double play was made in this inning by Schafer, who brought the house down by the way in which he did it. He was running for Birdsall and was on first base, the second and third bases being covered by Cone and Barnes. Schafer played between first and second, holding the ball there, and gifting both Cone and Barnes a chance to run in before he was finally run out. The Kekiongas got two men on first and second bases in the eighth innings, with only one man out, and it began to look as though they would obtain a tally; but Schafer took a fly from the bat of the next striker and fielded to first, making a close thing there, but the umpire said "out." On the last innings the Bostons hit another streak of safe batting, making five first base hits and scoring seven runs, when the score stood 20 to 6, and the Kekiongas went in for the last chance. Their first three strikers were rapidly finished in succession, the last one reaching by a splendid catch of Barnes'. Taken altogether it is doubtful if a better fielding game than this organization ever played a better game. Every man played splendidly, and it is no discredit to the other players to especially mention the playing of Barnes, who had a very large number of chances offered him, and though for the past day or two he had been sick, he took every chance with a single exception, and fairly covered himself with renown. CLEVELAND vs. STAR.

A SPLENDID FIELDING GAME IN BROOKLYN.

For the first time in the history of the Star Club, of Brooklyn, the champions of the amateur fraternity, on Tuesday, June 20th, had to submit to the process known as being "Chicagoed;" that is, put out in nine innings without scoring. Their opponents were the celebrated Forest City nine, of Cleveland, and the Stars never tendered a trophy to a club with less reluctance than to their gentlemanly adversaries on this noteworthy occasion. The weather was oppressively warm, but there was a larger attendance than on any previous match the Stars have played in this season. Moreover, the 'Lady's Stand" was graced with a number of the fair sex, the stand affording thorough protection from the heat and a fine view of the game.

The Stars had out the strongest nine they have yet placed in the field this season, and did their best fielding, but as their opponents also excelled in this respect, the result was one of the finest displays of ball playing ever witnessed on the grounds.

THE GAME.

began at 3.50, with the Cleveland nine at the bat, Jas. White leading off by taking his base on called balls. Allison was next, and, giving a chance for a fly catch to Worth, retired. Pabor was then disposed of by a sharp fly tip, pluckily taken by Barlow as it glanced from his breast, and, by Carleton's hit to Jackson, J. White was run out between 3d and 2d, the innings closing for a blank. On the other side the Stars gave easy chances for catches and, retired in the order in which they came to the bat.

In the second innings Allison opened with a hot bounder to Clyne, who fielded well to Breen, and Allison went no further. Pabor then sent a high ball, of the "splendid hit" kind, right into Worth's hands at centre field, and, as Clyne held Carleton's foul on the bound in good style, again were the Clevelands whitewashed. On the other side this compliment was duly returned by splendid fielding, Kimball taking a fly on the run prettily, and White making two beautiful catches behind the bat.

In the third innings Kimball opened play with a high one, which fell into Clyne's hands and out of them again, Kimball thereby having a life, but the error luckily did not help the Clevelanders. Pratt then gave worth a chance for a catch and retired, and as Worth threw to first, to make a double play, Kimball ran back. The ball, however, was thrown hot and wild, in old Star style, and but for Cummings' unwonted activity in backing up Breen—Arthur knowing Worth's propensity to throw wildly—Kimball would have had a couple of bases on the throw; instead, however, he did not get one. Sutton then hit a safe bounder past third, and earned his base, but in badly judging the action of Barlow on a passed ball, he was put out by Barlow's throw to Dollard, Kimball getting to his third. As E. White hit foul and the ball was well caught on the bound, close to the bat, by Barlow, the innings again closed, with the first run in the game yet to be scored. On the other side Jas. White disposed of Jackson by one of his splendid catches on three strikes, close to the bat, and the next two strikers, giving easy chances to Bass, were put out in succession. The game thus far promised to be exceptional, and of course the movements of the contestants were watched with increased interest each innings. No such result as the final one, however, was anticipated for a moment by the Star crowd.

In the fourth innings Bass opened play with a foul fly, which Clyne found it impossible to stop, and Bass earned his base. J. White, however, popped up a high foul, which Breen captured neatly, and Allison would have been second out had Jackson thrown the ball straight which Allison sent him, but Allison had a life given him by a wild pitch, got home to third, and Bass went home, and by Fisher's long high ball to M. Rogers, at right field, he came in, he leaving the base after the ball was held, Mort making a good catch. Carleton then hit to Clyne, and the ball being muffed, another life was given, and by two successive passed balls the third run was earned, Kimball closing the innings by striking out. The ice having been broken on one side, the Stars thought it was their turn to go in for a run, and so Rogers went in to hit one of his "corkers," and striking in his heavy style, sent a liner safely into Kimball's hands, and Worth would have been a victim of Carleton's had not Sutton slipped as he tried to field the ball. Dollard then came to the rescue with a safe hit—the first from the Star bats—Worth getting his second. By Clyne's hit to Pratt Worth was put out at third by Sutton, and as Dollard tried to run from second to third, he was captured by Sutton from a throw of J. White's, another whitewash being the result.

In the fifth innings the Cleveladers began to punish Cummings, their two first strikers earning their bases, and being assisted by passed balls, both men scored their runs. The next three strikers retired in succession, Barlow disposing of two pulled by good catches. On the other side the whitewash brush was again used with telling effect by the Forest Citys, and the Stars began to despair of getting a single run.

In the sixth innings Dollard and Clyne fielded out two of the Cleveland party prettily, and Barlow disposed of the third. On the other side Jackson opened with a safe hit and earned his base, and by a muff of Allison's on Jackson's hit to centre reached his second. The next two strikers were then prettily disposed of by Pratt, after which a passed ball—the first for White—then gave Jackson his third, and a run began to loom up among the possibilities; but F. Rogers hit in his "heavy style" again to Kimball and retired at first. Things now began to look serious for the Stars, as the score was 5 to 0 against them, and all hope of a victory was given up, they expressing themselves as being content if they could get in even one run.

Kimball led off in the seventh innings with an easy grounder to Dollard, and "out on the first" was the simple's end. Pratt then tipped a foul into Barlow's hands on the fly, and, as Clyne fielded Sutton's ball neatly to Breen, the result was a whitewash for Cleveland. Worth opened on the other side with a high ball, which Kimball could have got at, but Allison was called and Captain Kimball gave way, and, as Allison was unable to reach the ball, Worth earned his base, though, in reality, the hit afforded a chance for an out. In these cases, however, the batsman is allowed the credit of the hit. Dollard then hit a high foul towards right field, which Elmer White got under and held in good style, and then Worth had a life given him on a run to second, the ball being sent to second swiftly and accurately by White, and well held by Kimball, who touched Worth as he passed him; but Kimball, seeing that Worth had overrun his base, tried to touch him again, and of course this gave the umpire the impression that Kimball had failed the first time, and so he decided him not out. By Clyne's hit to Kimball Worth got round to third, Clyne retiring at first—two out and a man at third base. Once more did the position of things look favorable for a run, and by the slightest error one would have been scored. Just about this time the Star crowd were longing for a wild pitch or a passed ball, but Pratt sent the balls in swiftly but accurate, and the way they were held by the festive James behind the bat was a model of quiet but plucky and skilful catching. Breen was at the bat, and waited as long as he could, and then sent a hot bounder to Bass, who fielded it finely to Carleton, and once again did the disappointed and now despondent Stars retired with that first run yet to be scored.

In the eighth innings Clyne disposed of the first Forest City batsman by a well taken foul fly, Johnny fielding well in this game, and Worth caught Bass' long ball on the run prettily; Barlow disposed of the third man on a high foul fly, this little active catcher playing his position finely. The Stars could console themselves by the fact that, if they could not get runs themselves, their adversaries found it almost as difficult. In fact, had the Stars played such a game as this with the White Stocking nine they would have beaten them beyond a doubt. On the other side, in this innings, the Stars gave easy chances for outs, and retired in one, two, three order.

The ninth and last innings was now commenced, and the sanguine friends of the Stars still hoped to see that coveted run scored, but fate had otherwise ordained. Allison and Pabor opened play on the Cleveland side with high foul balls, well taken by Barlow and Cummings, and when Carleton came to the bat it was expected the innings would close, but he hit a safe bounder out of Clyne's reach and earned his base, and as Cummings threw wide to second, to get Sutton out there—he running for Carleton—Sutton got round to third, and by Kimball's safe hit came home. Before the latter could get in, however, Cummings disposed of Pratt on the fly, the innings closing for one unearned run. Barlow led off on the other side with a high foul ball, which Pratt dropped, White falling his base to back him up for the bound, but the error did not help the Stars, as Barlow hit to Pratt and retired at first. "Biler" then took his turn at the bat to get that coveted "home run," something he would rather obtain than half a dozen first base hits. Of course he "popped one up," and "foul out" was the call of the umpire. Worth now came in to the rescue with a first base hit, but before he could get any further Dollard sent a foul bound ball into White's hands and the Stars retired from the field a Chicagoed party, much to the chagrin of their partisans, who did not think there was a club in the country that could perform such a feat. The score:—

EXCELSIOR vs. ROSE HILL.

On June 21st the Excelsior Club of Brooklyn, visited Fordham to play the Rose Hill nine of St. John's College, and going up short handed, the result was their signal defeat. The contest was rendered dull and tedious, except to the immediate friends of the College nine, by the fact that the game was played with an elastic ball, the result being one of those heavy batting displays, accompanied by errors in the field, always incident to lively ball contests, the fact that there were no less than 72 fielding errors in the game rendering it unnecessary to comment in detail on the play. Neither club, as yet, have a regularly organized nine occupying home positions, and both now lack the services of efficient pitchers, as, on the one hand, the Rose Hills depend upon the wild, swift pitching of Burns, with its costly sequence of passed balls and over pitches, and on the other hand, since Peters was so badly hit by the ball in the Athletic match, he is afraid to face the music, and no matter what the ability of a pitcher may be in other respects, if he is afraid he had better retire altogether. Burns is still the same pitcher he was some three years ago, not a particle of improvement being manifested, an entire lack of command of the ball rendering the power to pitch swiftly entirely useless. The support given him was poor in comparison to that we have hitherto seen at the hands of this college nine, the first baseman alone playing his position up to the required standard. Villa made several good catches, but offset them with glaring errors. O'Brien pitched with effect after the third innings. He is the better man of the two pitchers, decidedly. E. Jewell bore off the palm in rendering effectual service on the Excelsior side, all the rest of the nine being more or less rusty, if we except Packer, who alone played his position up to the mark. Dan Chauncey caught well, but threw badly, George Chauncey playing the next best to Packer. The captain's growling, on the Excelsior side, was an unpleasant feature. The umpiring was on a par with the display in the field, his leniency towards Burns being very great. After the game the collegians hospitably entertained their guests in the college refectory. CLEVELAND vs. RESOLUTE.

The Cleveland nine visited Elizabeth, N. J., on June 21st and in the afternoon played the Resolute Club of that place at the Waverly Fair grounds, in the presence of a few hundred spectators and myriads of mosquitoes. Elmer White caught and Pabor pitched for the Forest City nine, James White and Pratt taking a rest. The Resolutes had their strongest nine out, but failed to do themselves justice. M. Campbell's first base play was a feature of the game. The two clubs had an umpire entirely ignorant of the rules, as he stated before he accepted the position. He tried his best, however, and was impartial. The score:—

MANSFIELD vs. YALE.

YALE THE WINNER.

A long but interesting match between these two clubs was played on the ground of the former, at Middletown, Ct., on Wednesday, June 21st. The Collegians ran an excursion train from New Haven, and quite a large crowd was in attendance. The game opened with Yale at the bat. By several errors they were given four runs. Wheeler, of the Yales, distinguished himself in this innings by a magnificent left hand catch, made while tumbling backward. The playing on both sides was very loose until the fifth innings, when it became evident to both sides that Yale did not have such a "soft thing" as was supposed, and both clubs went to work in earnest. The Mansfield kept a small lead until the last innings, when Yale, by some splendid batting, gained the game by the score of 21 to 18. The Yale nine played below their usual standard, the men generally considered surest making several bad muffs. The return game is to be played at New Haven on Saturday, the first of July. that they may be dear the object of their adoration: but "after life's fitful fever" with the circus boys, they cease to sleep well, but ever hanker after the sawdust and its peripatetic somersaulters, and refuse to be comforted because they are not. There's more fun at a country circus than at a similar show in the city; the surroundings are different at a country show—everybody makes a holiday of it, and fetch along their rye tommie, corn a and scrunch. Corn provender, which, as they munch and scrunch, seems to give a zest to the entertainment, and put a'n in a happy frame of contentment'. In this connect on, with your permission, good, patriotic reader, we will indite a few pleasant rhymes and cheerful puns on

YE CIRCUS CLOWN.

He's always certain of his "laugh,"
Wherever he appears,
With changes that show astounding health
Our friend of former years;
He is a useful man, although
He capers and buffoons,
He's perfect in the "banner acts,"
And "up" in the balloons."

How condescending does he seem,
When smilingly he'll go
To ask the riders "what they'll have,"
(As it he didn't know!)
He would not hurt the smallest fly
That 'neath the canvas flouts,
And yet he often forces "joys"
Down other people's throats.

His stories are enough, at times,
To melt a heart of stone;
To give the riders time for breath
He'll sacrifice himself.
Purchases a sentimental song
He'll warble, "by request,"
And it has such a mental joy
To many a female breast.

He'll often take a horse's tail,
And use it as a fan,
Or roll a "darkey" in the ring
To call him "black and tan."
And may he which as more and more
With mirth creasing spells,
Until he seeks a quiet life
And doffs the "cap and bells."

.....All nature looks as happy this bright and shining morning as the brethren and sisters of Brother Allen's chapel looked that winter's night when they carried out the stove to make room for the workings of the spirit, and when Brother Allen, in the fulness of his heart, at this delightful exhibition of pious devotion, shouted out: "Oh, me preshus lams, take kar ob de pipe, and don't let go de stove till you git 'em clar out into de yard; oh, its good tu work in de vinyard; brother Wabins, wot you charge to clean dat stove afore de close ob dis 'sival?" Ah, those were happy nights we passed with brother Allen and his "preshus lams," at their last revival. But even the humble brother Allen must have his "noonan;" his health, never rugged at the best, gives painful evidence of failing, and his "lams," in imitation, perhaps, of their more wealthy white brethren, have made up a purse, and given their pastor a furlough of two months for a sojourn among the mountains. May the venerable divine return to his colored flock recuperated in spirits and health, so that his "preshus lams" may open the coming season with auspicious results, and make wild with joy his "nut-cracking" disciples. And so, having had a little patriotic and spiritual conversation with our many readers, we will now close this part of the entertainment, and call your attention to the realities of life, as represented on the mimic boards by our Thespian friends, their auxiliaries and assistants, and which will be found duly set forth in the department that follow.

MR. AND MRS. J. J. WALLACE, who acted during the past season at the Academy of Music, Cleveland, O., arrived in town the past week.

AT WALLACK'S THEATRE, on Wednesday night, was revived Leon Boucicault's comedie drame, entitled "The Long Strike," which was presented with the following cast:—

Mercypenny	J. H. Stoddart
Nora Learoyd	Chas. Fisher
Jem Starkey	T. Riggold
Johnny Kelly	J. H. Wilkinson
Cupbaise	C. W. Barry
Richard Radley	C. Rockwell
The Duke	Mr. Arnlage

Telegraph operator
Jane Learoyd

The play last night consisted of elaborate scenes, those of Manchester by moonlight and the telegraph office being the most conspicuous and

It was witnessed upon the night in question by a large audience, and the attendance continues during the week. The drama, as a whole, was well rendered, a representation of Mercypenny artistic, and to the life representation of Johnny Kelly, his duties being undertaken with correct, his tout ensemble approaching perfection as nearly as possible. That he has studied the idiosyncracies of nautical men closely, was self-evident. Crankshaw was carefully acted by C. W. Barry, who made his first appearance this season on the initial performance of this drama. Mr. Charles Rockwell acted Richard Radley with gentlemanly ease, and Mr. T. Holland, as the telegraph operator, and the boys who played the messengers, gave a faithful copy of real life. One of the latter, who was supposed to have been aroused from a deep sleep, was rewarded with a hearty round of applause for his close imitation of nature in his pantomimic acting, no words being allotted him. The only female character in the drama, Jane Learoyd, was well acted by Miss Effie Germon, considering that her forte is to create mirth rather than to touch the pathetic feelings of the heart. During the entre acts the orchestra, under the direction of Thomas Baker, performed choice selections of music, which were not among the least attractions of the evening, quite prominent among which was the singing of a carol by Master Julius Peters. After the withdrawal of the "Long Strike," Boucicault's latest drama, entitled "Elfe," is announced for production.

W. R. FLOYD passed through the city on June 23d, pausing a few hours to greet his numerous friends, en route to his summer residence in Long Branch, N. J. Mr. Floyd will continue to manage the Globe Theatre, at Boston, Mass, the coming season, notwithstanding that he has received the most flattering offers through Mr. T. Moseby Simmons, the president of the Varieties Club, of New Orleans, La., to lease the new Varieties Theatre, now in process of construction in that city. Upon Mr. Floyd's declining to lease that theatre he again received offers to manage it for the stockholders upon a salary, which he was compelled to decline in consequence of previous engagement with Mr. Cheney, the whole souled and generous proprietor of the Globe Theatre, Boston.

JOHN E. OWENS, the popular comedian, was in this city a few days the past week, interchanging courtesies with his many friends. He intends playing an limited star engagement at the Globe Theatre, Boston, Mass., early in the season, and does not become a member of the stock company there, as several of the "reliable" dailies have asserted.

MISS EMMA HOWSON added fresh vitality to the somewhat prosy drama of "Paul Clifford," which formed the attraction at Niblo's Garden during the past week, by the introduction of a fresh selection or two in the performance of which her excellent soprano voice was heard to even greater advantage than during the previous week. Mr. Collins continued to act the leading role. This evening the "Colleen Bawn" will be acted and Mr. Charles Wheatleigh, will be added to the company.

T. B. DE WALDEN is at present engaged in writing a play for the Coleman children.

JAMES MAGUIRE made his debut upon the dramatic stage at the Bowery Theatre on Monday evening, June 19th, acting three characters in a new and original drama in four acts, written by William Vershay, and entitled "Over the Falls." The play was not marked by any novel effects or incidents, neither can we commend its dialogue for brilliancy, it being commonplace and at times wearisome. The sensation scene consisted of a descent from a railroad track—which passes over a cascade—with a child in his arms into the torrent below, in order to escape an approaching train which threatens him on one side, while on the other is concealed the villain of the drama and his accomplices, who seek possession of the child. The plot is made up of trite incidents, and there is no need to rehearse it here. Mr. Maguire has self possession and comparative ease, and for a first appearance acquitted himself quite creditably. Two of the characters impersonated by him were Irish, the third being a sailor. We do not think that he possesses sufficient talent to raise him to eminence in the profession, yet he has sufficient to enable him to hold a respectable position in the stock company of a melodramatic theatre. At the present time, when sensational dramas abound, the chances of success are limited where a play is written by some new writing original effect or incident. The several members of the company labored conscientiously with their parts, but there was little scope for any brilliant display. The drama was preceded by one entitled "Robert Macaire; or, The Two Murderers," in which Mr. Marden and George France appeared to advantage. The attendance has been but moderate.

JAPANESE TOMMY, now performing with Sam Hague's Slave Troupe, in Liverpool, Eng., returns to this city in August, being engaged by Newbomb and Arlington for their minstrel hall the coming season.

"DELMONICO'S; OR, LARKS UP THE HUDSON," was acted for the first time at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, on Tuesday evening, June 20th, with the following cast:—

Spence Sherman	Mr. Parkes
Fred Dandrey	Mr. Parks
Tippy Belton	Mr. De Vere
Brandywine Bowles	Mr. Lewis
Bottles	Mr. Davidge
Nina Roberts	Miss F. Davenport
Constance Sherman	Miss Clara Morris
Angelica Bowles	Mrs. G. H. Gilbert
Amaryllis Bowles	Miss L. Dietz
Polly Bottles	Miss N. Mortimer
Susie Bottles	Miss Louisa Volmer

It was announced as "a new local comedy," but it is in fact a three act farce. The programme informs us that it had been "re-arranged and adapted expressly for this theatre from the French of Victorien Sardou and another," meaning "La Papillon," and probably "Les Premiers Sept Sous de M. Montaudoin," some of the characters and incidents of the latter being forcibly amalgamated with the former, and for the ostensible purpose of introducing Mr. Lewis, Mr. Davidge and Mrs. Gilbert. Some years since a version of "La Papillon" by Messrs. Frank Wood and Augustin Daly was acted at the Olympic Theatre, and it possessed far greater merit than the one under consideration, which is a rehash of that one, with the plot somewhat forced and improbable. The title is somewhat far-fetched, there being but one slight allusion to that famed culinary resort in the entire piece. The action takes place at a gentleman's country seat at Yonkers upon the Hudson. Many of the situations are comical, though the story is indelicate and the language lacks refinement, bordering at times upon grossness. Its stage setting was beautiful, the drawing-room scene, with a view of a winter landscape, being especially commendable. Mr. Harkins acted Spence Sherman with much vivacity. Mr. Parkes as Fred Dandrey, who is in love with Mrs. Sherman, but whose timidity of disposition prevents him declaring his passion, was careful and correct. Tippy Belton, a species of lunatic, was played in a forcible manner by Mr. De Vere. Brandywine Bowles afforded Mr. Lewis a good opportunity for displaying his comic powers, of which he availed himself to the fullest extent. The character of Bowles, acted by Mr. Davidge, has in reality nothing to do with the play, being literally dragged in, and was only saved from ridicule by the artistic abilities of the performer. Nina Roberts, a young widow, much given to slang, flirtation and frolic, was agreeably impersonated by Miss Fanny Davenport, and richly costumed. Miss Clara Morris acted the true wife and accomplished lady with much taste. Angelica Bowles, a slight sketch of an old maid, was effectively acted by Mrs. Gilbert. Miss Linda Dietz looked charmingly and had little to do as Amaryllis Bowles. Miss Nellie Mortimer as Polly Bottles was fairly bubbling over with mirth, and Miss Volmer delivered the few lines set down for her with due attention. As a work of art it may be pronounced a failure. But that it will amuse and is likely to prove remunerative, we concede, and that its bordering on indelicacy will strongly recommend it to the somewhat vitiated taste of the public audiences of the present day. It attracted fair audiences during the week and is announced for continued representation.

THE WIDOW AND FAMILY of the late Dan Symons are to benefit by the receipts of a matinee performance to be given at the Olympic Theatre, on Thursday, June 29th, when Joe Jefferson, G. L. Fox, Nell Warner, Mrs. James A. Oates and others, with the generosity which is characteristic of the profession, will voluntarily render artistic aid.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE, during the past week, the spectacular pantomime of "The Three Hunchbacks" constituted the attraction, save on Saturday night, when the managers, Messrs. Mark Smith, L. J. Vincents and W. Devarna, received a benefit, when one act of the above named pantomime was given, and Balfe's opera entitled the "Bohemian Girl" was sung with the following cast:—

Count Arnheim	Henri Drayton
Thaddeus	J. E. Bowler
Florestein	Arthur Matthison
Devilshoof	Arthur Howell
Captain of the Guard	Mr. Magill
Officer	Mr. Ellis
Gipsy Girl	Mr. Clark
Second Gipsy	Mr. Williams
Arline	Miss Rose Hersee
Buda	Miss Stevens
Queen of the Gipsies	Miss Fannie Goodwin

In the first act of the opera a grand ballet was introduced, in which Miles. Zuardi, the Sisters Francisco and Signor Costa appeared. Mr. Henri Drayton was announced to have made his last appearance in opera prior to his appearance upon the dramatic stage. On Wednesday evening Charles Abbott, the favorite clown, took a benefit, which was well attended. The season at this house closed with the performance of Saturday evening, June 24th.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, during the past week, Miss Lucille Western acted in the "Child Stealer," playing the character of Margaret Rookley with deep feeling and pathos. In the scene in which that character is represented under the influence of intoxicating liquors she was painfully realistic. The play has been before the public for some years, and it is therefore unnecessary to comment upon it at length. Miss Western closed her engagement with the performances of Saturday evening last, and for this evening Mr. and Mrs. Harry Watkins are announced to commence a limited engagement, during which they will appear in a number of sensational plays in which they have won much distinction in the provinces. It is said that an original drama, founded upon incidents which occurred during our late internecine strife, from the pen of Mr. T. B. Walden, is shortly to be produced, with an elaborate mise-en-scene.

MISS FANNY HERRING acted at Tony Pastor's during the past week, appearing for five nights in a new drama entitled "Grit; or, Out on the Plains," by D. R. Young, which is sensational in character and possessed of no novelty of incident and is not characterized by brilliancy of dialogue. It possibly answered its purpose so far as the treasury was concerned, but according to the custom which prevails upon that side of the city, in order to give place to a strong Saturday night's bill, it received its final representation on Friday evening. For the closing performance of the week the "French Spy" and "Dick Turpin and Tom King; or, The Two Highwaymen," were acted, and for this evening, June 26th, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is announced to be performed. On the Saturday matinee, "Jenny Lind" and "Jack Sheppard" with Miss Herring in the title roles of both pieces were acted. A fair attendance has greeted the efforts of Miss Herring and her assistant artists during the week. J. L. Sanford and wife closed their engagement here on June 24th.

AT WOOD'S MUSEUM during the entire past week the pantomime of the "Three Blind Mice" was performed to a fair average attendance by the Fox and Denier pantomime troupe, of the merits of which we have already written. On Monday evening, however, which will be on Saturday night and will give place this evening, June 26th, to another entitled "Humpty Dumpty," in which the same troupe will perform during the present week, closing their engagement on July 1st. Mr. James M. Ward, in a new sensational drama from the prolific pen of J. J. McClosky, and en'itled "Through by Daylight," will be the succeeding attraction, commencing July 3d. On Sunday evening George Francis Train delivered one of his characteristic lectures to the auditorium of the theatre. The dramatic unity, Miss Lulu, and the Scottish Albino Boy, Igor Roy Mangregor, continue on exhibition during the day and evening of the evening.

THE TWELFTH NATIONAL SANGERFEST, of the North American Singers, commenced in this city on Sunday evening with a grand reception concert at the Academy of Music by the singing societies, and will be closed only until the close of Thursday, June 29th.

MR. HENRY APEX, the distinguished musician of the violin, was in this city during the past week, on a visit to his brother, Mr. Ernest Apex, a distinguished violoncellist, who had recently arrived in this country from London, Eng., and who, at present, is engaged with Theodore Thomas' orchestra, at the Central Park Garden. It is expected that Mr. Apex will make his first appearance this week at Matilda Heron's benefit, as violinist, and a pupil of Mr. Ernest Apex, formerly residing in the city during the last years, is to assist in the performance of the same evening. Mr. Apex has the intention of taking up her residence in this city in the ensuing fall.

MR. J. A. HERNE, a popular actor in this city and elsewhere, will commence an engagement at the Globe Theatre, under an unannounced management, this evening, June 26th, appearing in his graceful impersonation of the leading characters in the "Police Spy." Rapid changes in the programmes are announced for the week.

THE REPUTED GAYLER AND EMMET IMBROGLIO is totally denied in a published card over the signature of Mr. Gayler, who asserts that their "relations are the same as they have been since our connection commenced." Mr. Emmet will commence an engagement at Niblo's Garden on August 14th.

GEORGE METKIFF returned to the city the past week from Philadelphia, Pa., where he had been acting the past season at the New Chestnut Street Theatre.

AT THE BRANDT OPERA HOUSE a troupe of performers of opera bouffe is announced for July 3d, when "La Perichole" will be given, with Miles. Aimee and Silly in the principal roles and M. Paul Juignet will make his debut in opera in the character of the Viceroy.

JOHN E. OWENS, R. M. Field, manager of the Museum, Boston, Mass.; Charles R. Pope, Ben De Bar, Henry Greenwall, W. T. M. Leak and J. W. Langrishe, manager in Denver and other towns in Colorado, arrived in the city during the past week. Ben De Bar left for Montreal, C. E., at the latter part of the week.

E. B. HOLMES was the recipient of a benefit at Lina Edwin's Theatre on Saturday evening, June 24th, when a good sized audience was assembled. Miss Mary Stuart, who made such a favorable debut at the same theatre some months since, acted Fanny Magnet in "Stage Struck," and the male character of Jem Baggs in "The Loving Mingles," both of which she did credit to this evening. The following artists appeared:—The Misses Edith Challis, Mattie Sackett, Susan Flood, Thurber and Nellie Peck, Mrs. M. T. Way, Messrs. Alex. Fitzgerald, W. R. Teasdale, J. J. Wallace, Thomas Leigh, George Lascelles, H. F. Douglass, Charles Norris and Harry Peck. "Lost in London" was the opening play.

ALEX. FITZGERALD has been secured by Ben De Bar as stage manager of the St. Charles Theatre, New Orleans, La., for the coming season.

MR. LEWIS BAKER will be associated with Mr. John F. Cole in the management of the Grand Opera House during the coming season.

MISS JENNIE MORTON is the star the present week at the Bowery Theatre, acting in "Lotta."

LOTTA opens the season at Booth's Theatre, commencing August 14th, and John T. Raymond has been engaged to play Dick Swiveller.

DANIEL E. BANDMANN and wife, professionally known as Miss Milly Palmer, will commence an engagement at the Grand Opera House September 4th, the lady making her debut in this city on that date. Mr. Bandmann will present four new plays during his engagement, one now being written for him by Sydney Grundy, and will be by no author, of London, Eng.; one by a local author; one from the Hungarian, and a new version of "Faust," by Tom Taylor, in which they achieved great success in the Australian colonies.

MISS FANNY MORGAN PHELPS performed in Harlem, N. Y., June 22d, 23d and 24th. She had the assistance of a dramatic company.

AT BOOTH'S THEATRE will close July 4th. "The Man O'Airlie," in which Mr. Lawrence Barrett acts James Harebell, will continue the attraction.

MONS. BLANDOWSKI, the efficient ballet master, left the city on June 26th, with a full ballet corps for Baltimore, Md., where they are to play a long engagement at the Baltimore Opera House.

MORRIS SIMMONDS, dramatic agent, 609 Broadway, advertises that he is ready to negotiate engagements with stars and combinations desirous of appearing at the Galveston and Houston, Texas, theatres. A dramatic company is also wanted for the former house.

T. A. DOW & CO., dramatic agents, 697 Broadway, state, through their card elsewhere, that they have a number of artists registered on their books. Senora Eloa D'Carfario, leading heavy lady, can be engaged through them. Ooa. Gea. Brown, dramatic agent, 718 Broadway, is prepared to supply the wants of managers, and among other artists registered with him the following desire engagements, some for the summer and others for the fall and winter season:—The Coleman children, Louis, Alice, and Clara, dramatic and musical prodigies; Blandowski, ballet master; Dollie Bidwell, star comedienne; Mad. Lee, danseuse, &c.; Little Vic, child actress; Johanna Pritchard, trapeze; Monsieur Montbain, comedienne; D. S. Morris, Dutch comedian, with his new play, "Dollars;" Lizzie Gale, leading lady; E. T. Stetson, who stars with "Neck and Neck;" James M. Ward, actor; Lillie Eldridge, comedienne; C. H. Bradshaw, comedian; and a sensation quartet of variety artists. He has also a play for sale, wants minstrel talent, is prepared to rent the Twenty-eighth street Opera House, N. Y., and the services of Robert Harvey, architect, can be secured through him.

HARRY CUNNINGHAM, dramatic agent, 626 Broadway, whose advertisements are in another column, wants first-class variety talent, a ballet master, a comedian and a full dramatic company to support Amy Stone. He is the agent for Charles Foster and James J. McCloskey, dramatists, from whom he has plays for sale, and Johnny Thompson, John C. Campbell and James Maguire, star actors, can be engaged through him.

MISS ANNIE DELAND sailed for London, Eng., on June 24th. She goes thither under engagement to Mrs. John Wood, the manageress of the St. James Theatre, in that city.

T. G. RIGGS, a popular actor, who played at Tony Pastor's during the past season, is to have a matinee benefit on Thursday, June 29th, when he is promised the assistance of considerable volunteer talent.

RIGGS AND FITZGERALD, dramatic agents, 681 Broadway, are prepared to attend to the general business of managers and profession. Their card is in another column.

Dramatic.

AT THE NEW OPERA HOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., our correspondent, writing under date of June 24th, says:—"The 'Black Crook,' which has held the boards for the last ten days, has drawn largely. Jester opened on June 19th with his marvelous performances. Lozado, the juggler, has made a hit, while Mlle. Devere in her dances is often encored each evening. Leo Morton, as Hertzog the Crook, and M. A. Kennedy as Von Puffengrunts, deserve special mention. Miss May Fiske as Stalacta, Miss Alice Brook as Carline and Mrs. Perry as Dame Barbara acted very well, while Ben. Rogers as Greppo kept the audience in a continual roar of laughter. The last night of the 'Black Crook' is announced for this evening. On Monday, June 26th, Robert McWade commences an engagement of one week, playing 'Rip Van Winkle,' for which new scenes, new appointments, &c., are being prepared."

ALBERT GOLLMER, burlesque artist, can be engaged through his agent, Harry Cunnfingham.

LITTLE NELL, the California Diamond, can be engaged for the fall and winter through her agent, B. H. Grover, whose address is in another column.

ANDREW MCLEAN and A. W. Shannon, joint authors of "At Last," "Dollars" and "Face to Face," state, through a card elsewhere, that their plays are duly copyrighted, and any infringement will be prosecuted.

THE ST. FELIX INFANT BALLET TROUPE of sensational and character dancers can be engaged through Col. T. A. Brown.

FROM TROY, N. Y., we learn through our correspondent that W. D. Van Arnam intends to commence work upon the new Opera House by the 1st of July. There is quite a lively contest between Frank Lawlor, of Albany, and Mrs. Emma Waller for the leasing of the theatre, and it is hard to say which will get it, although Frank Lawlor appears to have the inside track. With a first class company and a good manager the new Opera House will pay fully as well as any in the country. The Wallace Sisters' Burlesque and Comedy Troupe, under the management of Messrs. Vilia and Dobson, are announced to appear at Rand's Hall, Troy, N. Y., on the 26th, 27th and 28th, opening in "Clorinda; or, the Girl of the Period."

THE SAPPHO TROUPE performed in Bloomington, Ill., June 21st.

CONCERNING AMUSEMENTS in Chicago, Ill., we have the appended report from our correspondent dated June 23d:—"As yet, the hot weather has not had any noticeable effect upon the attendance at our places of amusement, as good houses have prevailed. At the Dearborn Theatre Robertson's comedy of 'Caste' is in its third week. The light and pleasing character of the piece, the sparkling and brilliant dialogue, handsome mounting, accurately correct costumes, together with the excellent acting of the entire Wyndham Company have been attended by full houses every night the present week. 'Caste' will be shelved on the 24th, and on the 26th 'Home' will be presented.....Monday evening last witnessed the re-opening of Wood's Museum, under the management of Col. Wood, its original manager, with the veteran magician and ventriloquist, Signor Blitz, as the attraction. A very good audience was present, and the attendance has remained fair. During the short time that the theatre has been closed, a fresh coat of paint has been added and a thorough scrubbing out has taken place, and with this little improvement the auditorium presents a very neat appearance. The general overhauling will not take place until just before the regular fall and winter season opens. R. L. Marsh, late treasurer of the Dearborn, has been engaged by Col. Wood to fill the same position at the Museum.....Manager J. S. Langrishe, of Denver, arrived in the city a few days since, and is said to have leased Wood's Museum for a season—the exact length of time not known, nor his opening date as yet.....The Katie Putnam comedy company are in their second week at Hooley's Opera House, and are favored with a succession of large audiences. The present week's bill consists of the comedy of 'A Happy Pair,' and the new sensational drama entitled 'Sans Souci.' The latter piece was written expressly for the charming Katie, and is very similar to scores of sensation plays now being produced. Of its merits the least said the better, and were it not for the acting of Miss Putnam, Mr. Jeaninne and Mr. Fawcett, it would have met with a disastrous fasiure the first night. Miss Putnam is introduced in a triple role, first as a wild, untamed, reckless girl of the Pawnee order, which she plays in a remarkably pleasing manner, after which she appears as Cupid, a young gent of the period, and then as Elsie Almar, an actress, giving her an opportunity for songs and dances. As Cupid she appears to excellent advantage. Her Elsie is also an admirable personation. Mr. Jeaninne' Comodore Hallstorm and Apollo, are as fine impersonations as he has given us for some time. Mr. Fawcett has a good part in Cloudy Mornington, and succeeds in making it one of the best in the piece. Edwin Browne assumes the character of Thurston Wilmer, which is, in fact, a role that furnishes not the slightest scope for acting. The minor parts are of no account. Mr. Blaisdell, as Mr. Honeyton, in the 'Happy Pair,' exhibited fresh traits of genius, presenting the character naturally. Miss Putnam's Mrs. Honeyton lacked feeling, but, aside from this, gave a satisfactory personation.....Crosby's Opera House is closed, but will shortly open with McDonough's trans-Atlantic Novelty Company.....Mr. F. L. Keller, late of the Museum, is about to organize a dramatic company for a short country tour.....John Mulligan and J. Brandisi left the Hooley Minstrels at St. Louis, returning to the city on the 19th. Mr. Brandisi joins the Holman Opera Troupe, at Toronto, Canada, on the 26th."

CONCERNING THEATRICALS in St. John, N. B., our respondent, writing on June 22d, says:—"Since my last letter to you things theatrical have been very flourishing. Kate Reignolds finished a two weeks' engagement on Saturday evening at the Lyceum, that must have been very gratifying to every one concerned. On the occasion of her last benefit she played 'Richelieu at XVI' to one of the largest and most fashionable houses of the season. The performance was a grand success. On Tuesday, the 20th, O. D. Byron made his first bow to a St. John audience in his specialty 'Across the Continent.' The house was crowded, and applause frequent and liberal. The scenery in the prologue was the best we have ever seen at the Lyceum.....Last night the same piece drew a very large house. To-night (the) Mr. Byron appears in 'Waiting for the Verdict.' He is announced for a benefit to-morrow night, and we are not in the secret as to the manager we can't inform you what is to be played. Mr. Byron has made a decided hit here, and has been finely supported by the company. Prof. Manley's excellent orchestra gains in favor nightly. Lillie Eldridge is announced for next week."

HARRY JOSEPHS has secured the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Pa., for the second comedy at the San Francisco Minstrel Soiree, Philadelphia, Pa., on the 4th of July.

DR. AVE' Baritone, [illegible] acting in Galveston, Texas, during the past season, had resolved to pass the summer in this city, but on the very day he was to have sailed by the steamer he broke his leg, and his physician says he will be confined to his residence some five or six weeks.

THE ROBERT BUTLER PANTOMIME TROUPE is billed to play three nights in London, Ont., commencing June 26th, thence to Toronto for one week.

WHILE THE WALLACE SISTERS' BURLESQUE COMPANY were performing in Utica, N. Y., June 21st, a large number of unruly urchins attempted to force their way into the hall without paying therefor. Upon ejecting some that were disturbing the audience in the hall, they joined to forces outside and attacked Frank Robson, one of the managers, with stones and clubs. Mr. Dobson fired his revolver into the crowd, which dispersed them, fortunately without injury. There was no policeman in attendance to preserve order.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE, Quincy, Ill., a portion of McVicker's company from Chicago, Ill., commenced an engagement on Monday, June 19th, presenting "Caste" for their initial performance. Our correspondent, writing on June 21st, says:—"The charming comedy of a 'Widow Hunt' was produced, with Charles Stanley as De Boots, Harry Langdon as Featherly, Dick Russell as Icebrook, Mrs. Jamison as Mrs. De Boots, Miss Susie Cluer as Mrs. Featherby, and Mrs. Wallack as Mrs. Swansdown. The characters were very cleverly portrayed throughout, and the piece was put on the stage with unusual care and excellence. Stanley made a capital De Boots and was generally liked. His make-up was artistic and his whole action seemed closely identified with the character. Langdon as Featherly was, at times, overdrawn, while at others he acted quite acceptably. Russell found a character well suited to his abilities as Icebrook, and his impersonation was a creditable one. Miss Cluer looked very prettily and acted superbly as Mrs. Featherby. She is exceedingly handsome and elicited frequent rounds of applause from the audience. Jamison as Mrs. De Boots, was charming, graceful and correct, and won merited applause. Mrs. Wallack as Mrs. Swansdown, met with an ovation similar to that accorded the above named ladies. The performance was one of the most enjoyable that we have witnessed here for years. The farce of 'Jumbo Jim,' with Stanley in the title role, and in which he introduced a number of character songs and dances, concluded the performance. This evening, Robertson's last work—and for the first time in this city—'War' will be given."

THE SAPPHO DRAMATIC COMPANY commenced an engagement at Peoria, Ill., of three nights on June 22d, to good business. Our correspondent, who wrote on the 23d says:—"The opening operetta by Mr. and Miss Ellis was capital. Mr. Lawrence's 'Shaun O'Brien' was one of the best pieces of declamation it has ever been our good fortune to listen to. Frank Dillon, a la Lingard, is a brick. The performance, however, of the Sappho, only ten years old, was far beyond anything that has appeared in our city for years. To give the audience a sample of her talent she rehearsed the scene from the 'Tempest' in which Prospero gives Ariel his directions in regard to the disposal of the wreck of mariners. The manner in which the latte excellence as to draw from the audience frequent and enthusiastic applause. At the end of the last act Miss Coombs and Mr. Robinson were called before the curtain. The 'Lady of Lyons' was produced on the 20th to a comfortably filled house. The rain somewhat interfered with the attendance. The performance was most enjoyable. Miss Coombs' Pauline was faultless from first to last. Mr. Robinson's Claude Melnotte was meritorious in the extreme. Mr. Bradley's Colonel Damas elicited general admiration. What Mrs. Wilkins had to do as Madame Deschappelles, was done excellently well. Miss Coombs and Mr. Robinson were summoned before the curtain twice during the evening. 'London Assurance' constituted the bill on the 21st. The attendance was very large and very enthusiastic. Miss Coombs as Lady Gay Spanker, Mr. Bradley as Sir Harcourt Courtley, and Mr. Robinson as Dazzle, were peculiarly happy. The play was magnificently costumed, and I venture to say never so satisfactory rendered in Pittsburgh as on this occasion. On the 22d 'Love's Sacrifice' was given to a crowded audience. Miss Coombs, as Margaret Elmore, gave us another striking evidence of her dramatic genius. She was absolutely grand, and the applause accorded her was sometimes so great as to interfere with the progress of the play. Mr. Robinson's Matthew Elmore was a masterly effort. Mr. Bradley's Friar Dominic was without a flaw, and the Jean Rose of Mr. Coleman was very good. Mrs. Wilkins and Mrs. Lanagan were admirable in their respective roles. On the 23d 'Romeo and Juliet' will be presented for Miss Coombs' benefit. The 'Love Chase' will be given for Saturday's matinee, and in the evening 'The Hunchback' will conclude Miss Coombs' engagement here. That this has been one of the most profitable week's business this theatre has ever had no one will deny, and that the legitimate drama, when properly presented, will receive due recognition in Pittsburgh, cannot be successfully refuted.....Mr. Coulter, the popular treasurer of the Pittsburgh Opera House, will take his benefit on July 3d. He deserves a large audience.....Lina Edwin's New York Dramatic Company appeared on the 21st and 22d inst. at the Academy of Music, in the three act comedy of 'Rank,' to bad houses. It was unfortunate for both Lina Edwin and the Pittsburgh public that she struck Pittsburgh this week, as many more of our citizens would have availed themselves of the opportunity to see Miss Edwin's really excellent company if the counter-attraction had not been so great. 'Rank' is a beautiful domestic comedy and every character in it was cleverly impersonated. Miss Edwin, Messrs. George Clark, Harry Eytinge and Mark Bates were very liberally applauded during both entertainments. Prof. Wiebe's violin solos were masterpieces and many of them were encored. Miss Emiltee Krauss is an accomplished pianist.....Manager Beamer has returned to the city and will shortly go to work renovating and refitting the Fifth Avenue Opera House, preparatory to opening it early in the fall with an efficient stock company, which is now being engaged. First class combinations will also be played by Mr. Beamer during the season."

THE FOLLOWING COMMENTS upon the condition of the drama in Albany, N. Y., are forwarded by our correspondent under date of June 24th:—"Business has been very fair at the Trimble Opera House, with the Chapman Sisters as the attraction. They opened in 'Fra Diavolo' on June 19th. On the 20th 'Aladdin' and 'Young America' composed the bill. 'Little Jack Sheppard' was given on the 21st. On the 22d, 23d and 24

Baker," in which Miss Lucy Clifton and Harry Williams displayed their amusing powers to much advantage. Billy Barry's song and dance is always applauded. Miss Jessie Clifton displayed the power and promise of a well trained voice in several songs; while Miss Blanche Alford and Mr. Sidney Fraser, who made their respective ancestral débuts, were received with much favor. The specialties of the Emmett Brothers, Master Wheeler, Billy Barry and Charley Reynolds, appeared in the amusing acts of "The Medical Students" and "Turn Him Out," and the performance terminated with the female minstrels. On Monday evening, June 26th, Mr. J. M. Mortimer, one of the proprietors of this establishment, was up for a complimentary benefit, when a silver watch was to be awarded to the best amateur dancer, and a host of volunteers, including Bobby Newcomb and the Buffalo Boys, were to appear. Sam S. Sanford, the veteran manager and comedian, commences an engagement limited to six nights on June 26th, and Billy West, comedian and delineator, will also appear. On June 30th, Sam Sanford, and on the 3d of July, Mr. J. W. Wharton will have benefits.

AT THE ALHAMBRA, Philadelphia, the business has been fair during the past week. Miss Maggie Maiers and Miss Kate Morosite, danseuses, and John Shay, song and dance man, were the new faces that appeared during the week, taking the place of A. J. Talbot and Miss Emma Miles, who left. The leading features in the programme were the female minstrels, with Dick Parker and Joe Mack on the ends, and the excellent songs and dances of Otto Barbank and the serio-comic vocalism of Miss Amy De Rosat. The burlesques of "Claim Eh" and "Bad Dickey" afforded Otto Barbank an admirable opportunity for displaying rare talent as a comedian. The magical feats of Prof. Phaneuf, the dances of Mlle. Hemsteau, Mlle. Leonetta and Miss Maggie Maiers, and the song and dance of Johnny Shay, combined to make up a programme, concluding with the burlesque "Base Ball." This week, Harry Leslie will appear in his specialties, also Miss Belle Graham, serio-comic vocalist. The last week of Dick Parker is announced, and on the 29th of June he will have a complimentary benefit.

THE SUMMER SEASON at the Olympic Varieties, Philadelphia, will be inaugurated on Monday evening, the 26th of June, with a new company, Miss Hallie Eldridge, the protean vocalist, being the leading attraction. Dan Howard, the Ethiopian comedian, will make his re-appearance, and most of the old company has been re-engaged, including Mlle. Georgia, danseuse.

MECHANICS HALL, North Third street, Philadelphia, was re-opened on the 19th of June, as a variety theatre, with a company, including the Mineral Eadie Blood, Lizzie Lane, Mary Lingrange, Joe Warner, Samuel Norcross and other variety performers. The admittance is free.

FREE CONCERTS are given nightly at Valer's Winter Garden, Philadelphia, by Prof. Herman's military and string bands. Miss Rosalinda also appearing during the past week in serio-comic vocalisms.

AT THE QUAKERTOWN MUSIC HALL, Philadelphia, during the past week, the leading feature of the programme has been "Philadelphia by Gas Light!" introducing all the members of the company, including Miss Kate Clare, Miss Sallie Benner, Lew Spencer and Mel Kurtz.

AT SHELBY'S COMIQUE, Bumald, N. Y., the past week, says our correspondent, who wrote on June 24th, "Business continued excellent. The minstrel scene is still retained for the first part, and the olio is made up of numerous variety acts. The new faces were Miss Jessie Howard, instrumentalist and change artist, and Mr. Billy Emmit, late of the San Francisco Minstrels, both of whom have become favorites. Miss Howard's changes are made rapidly, and her voice is pleasing. Mr. Emmit's songs and acts are rendered quite creditably. The remainder of the company remains as heretofore, with the exception of Miss Nellie Whitney, who concluded her engagement last week. Miss Carrie Avery has become a favorite and nightly receives encores. I understand that she will remain during the season. The Misses Nagle and Avery gave 'La Manola' in an artistic style. Joe Lang, Oscar Willis and Den Howe do credit to their parts. The bill concludes with Willis' burlesque of 'Under the Gas Lamp,' which is a side-splitting affair, and is to be retained the coming week. Manager Shelby announces for Monday evening, 26th, Mr. Dan Dougherty, styled the 'Musical Momus,' who is said to play upon twenty-five different instruments. Three entertainments will be given on the 4th of July, viz., at 11 A. M., 3 and 8.30 P. M. On the 5th of July Manager Shelby will take his company to Erie, and henceforth alternate for short seasons between that city and this."

THE COMPLIMENTARY BENEFIT tendered by the citizens of Syracuse, N. Y., and vicinity to Mr. Frank Wild, occurred June 23d, and our correspondent, writing on June 24th, says:—"Owing to the large sale of tickets, Mr. Wild found it necessary to secure Shakespeare Hall, in addition to his own fine opera house, to accommodate the rush. The novel idea of presenting the same programme by the same company in two halls the same evening was successfully carried out, through the energy of Mr. Wild, assisted by his business manager, Mr. Charles Shanchet, and a corps of assistants and several volunteer amateurs of merit. The orchestra and silver cornet band, under the leadership of Prof. James Fish, added greatly to the entertainment. A very pleasant episode occurred, which showed the popular feeling and appreciation of Mr. Wild's efforts to entertain the public, in the presentation to him of a magnificent silver tea set. The presentation speech was made by Mr. J. D. Garfield, of this city, on behalf of the donors, to which Mr. Wild briefly but appropriately responded."

THE PERFORMANCES AT CARROLL'S VARIETIES, Kansas City, Mo., are reported as follows by our correspondent up to date of June 21st:—"Eva Brent made her debut on Sunday evening, the 18th, at which time 'McGregor's Gathering' and 'Home, Sweet Home' were rendered by her in a pleasing manner. The Female Minstrels were withdrawn on Monday evening. Kennedy, Quinn and Nellie Palmer appeared in a comic sketch, followed by Ada Boshell in a pleasing dance, Geo. Wilson in his new songs and dances, and the performance concluded with the 'Two Buzzards' and 'Miser of Marseilles,' with G. W. Malmburg as Claude Darnaud and Julia Blake as Victorine, and others of the company in the cast. G. W. Malmburg, as every American tragedian, takes a benefit on the 23d..... The Arcade, a new musical hall, was opened last evening, under the management of J. T. Cunningham."

FREQUENT CHANGE of management seems to be the order of the day at the Olympic Theatre, Chicago, Ill., seems to be the order of the day of late. Mr. Frayne has sold out his interest in the place to W. C. Mitchell, who is at present the sole lessee. Mr. Frayne remains as stage manager, as usual. The new appearances since my last constitute Miss Nelly Florence, vocalist; Jessie Becks; Mr. J. Goodman, pantomimist; H. Gibson, comedian, and W. D. Ryan, clogger. Miss Florence is a passable vocalist. Goodman is excellent in his castinet act. Gibson is only fair as a comedian. Ryan's clog dance can be greatly improved. La Belle Ida's song and dance is creating a perfect furore, and is admirably executed. Willie Bertha's singing is excellent. The duet by Clara Butler and Willie Bertha is the gem of the entertainment. Mol and Worley also do a good song and dance. The balance of the bill is first-class. The attendance continues good. So wrote our correspondent on June 23d.

M'LLE TOURNOUR, female gymnast, will be disengaged in September, and can be addressed as per advertisement.

FIRST-CLASS ARTISTS are advertised for by the proprietors of the Varieties Theatre, Peoria, Ill.

BEN HAYES is about to open a Theatre Comique in Montreal, C. E. Hugh Hammal has been engaged as stage manager.

THE BROOKLYN OPERA HOUSE, Brooklyn, L. I., was opened as a variety theatre on Monday, June 19th. Milburn, Carroll and Miss Annie Hindle, character vocalist, with quick changes, were the principal features. Owing to the business not being remunerative, it was closed after the performance of June 24th.

ROLLIN HOWARD closes his engagement at Martin and Deagle's Variety Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., July 1st, and will pass the summer vacation in the suburbs of Boston, Mass. Charley Sturges continues in St. Louis, and has assumed the direction of the minstrel department. "Let Me Be" is in its fourth week. Another sensation song and dance, composed by Rollin Howard and entitled "I Love You," is in rehearsal. The Sanyeahs are billed to commence an engagement on June 26th.

AT DENIER'S NOVELTY THEATRE, Titusville, Pa., Peasley and Fitzgerald closed their engagement on June 24th. During that week John Denier appeared as an Italian clown, and played the monkey in a sketch called "Day at the Fair." J. W. Sanford and Mlle. Emma performed a double dance. Miss Maggie Willet sang "You Know How it is Yourself," and acted five characters in the farce entitled "In and Out of Place," in which Mr. L. P. Roys acted Etiquette, and J. H. Rogers, Clod. Mlle. Emma and Miss Lizzie Warren performed several dances. For the present week Billy Carter, banjoist, and Lon Chapin, Ethiopian comedian, are announced to commence on the 26th.

Negro Minstrelsy.

BRYANTS' MINSTRELS filled a profitable engagement in Washington, D. C., last week at the National Theatre. A good reception was accorded the company on the opening night, the audience being a large one, although the state of the weather was not at all agreeable for an indoor entertainment. The troupe presented a formidable appearance in the first part, there being sixteen performers on the stage, six of the number forming the vocal corps. "When You and I Were Young" was very sweetly sung by Mr. Dempster, and "Champion Dance," with imitations, was well executed by Dave Reed. The remaining songs were admirably rendered by Messrs. Bryant, Barney, Stanley and D'Alberte. "Out at Sea," a new and very laughable finale, terminated the minstrel scene. On the first night, Mr. Brockway acted as interrogator, but on the second evening he did not appear, and Neise Seymour acted in that capacity. Delehanty and Henzler terminated their engagement with the company at Baltimore, June 17th, and Collins and Oakes (same line of business) joined the troupe here on the 19th. One of the most enjoyable features of the olio was the performance of J. W. McAndrews in his famous impersonation of the watermelon man. It was decidedly the best thing offered here in a very long time. So wrote our correspondent on June 22d.

SIMMONS AND SLOCUM'S MINSTRELS open for one week at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, on June 26th.

MANNING'S MINSTRELS perform in Covington, Ky., June 26th. On Monday, July 3d, they commence a season at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati.

HART, RYMAN AND BARNEY'S MINSTRELS are billed to perform in Albany, N. Y., June 30th, and July 1st; Troy, July 3d and 4th.

MANNING'S MINSTRELS performed in the Masonic Temple, Louisville, Ky., June 22d, when the first part, with the exception of the introductory overture and opening chorus, consisted entirely of songs by will S. Hays, a resident and popular composer of that city. They are billed to play in Covington the 26th, and to commence a brief season in Cincinnati, O., at Wood's Theatre, July 3d.

BRYANTS' MINSTRELS commence a brief season at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., July 3d.

WELSH, HUGHES AND WHITE'S BROOKLYN MINSTRELS gave two performances at Rand's Hall, Troy, N. Y., on the 22d and 23d, to very good houses. The performance given by this troupe was thoroughly enjoyable. Archie Hughes and Fayette Welch created a perfect furore on the ends by their rendering of comic songs. Their first part was all that could be desired, far above the usual average, but their olio was weak. They perform in Albany, N. Y., June 30th and 21st, and are billed to play in Schenectady the 26th. So wrote our correspondent on June 24th.

DUPREE AND BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS performed in Bloomington, Ill., June 20th.

HOOLEY'S MINSTRELS performed in Bloomington, Ill., June 22d and 23d.

NEWCOMB AND ARLINGTON'S MINSTRELS performed in Syracuse, N. Y., June 23d.

THE SOUTHERN MINSTRELS performed in Melrose, Mass., June 21st.

WASHBURN'S LAST SENSATION will appear at the Opera House, Reading, Pa., June 26th and 29th, and will re-open the Opera House, Allentown, Pa., July 3d and 4th; Trenton, N. J., 6th; then Princeton, Halsway and New Brunswick. Business continues good and the troupe is said to be a favorite one everywhere. The Middletown, N. Y., Press says of Mr. Washburn:—

"Wherever this popular manager has once exhibited his great moral show he is pretty sure of a crowded house on his second appearance. Sull's Opera House was filled last evening to witness the exhibition of Washburn's great assertion. We have not heard of a single person but was entirely satisfied and considered that he or she had got more than the worth of their money. In fact, this is the general expression every where, as we gather from our exchanges. The gymnastic performances of the Washburn Brothers and Jean Cadet, the lady trapeze performer, Jennie Mack and Miss Gussie Crayton, in their Irish and Dutch characters, brought down the house. The cards and ladder act by Leon Washburn was worth double the price charged for admission. The dialogue was in rapture of applause at the southern songs by the inimitable Harry Booker, and the clog dancing of the champion of the world, Jerry McMillan, was repeatedly encored. Our word for it, Washburn always gives you more and better for your money than any other showman that travels, Barnum not excepted."

DR. CASTRO, the magician, performed in Minneapolis, Minn., during the entire past week, and is billed to perform in St. Paul the week commencing June 26th, and in Stillwater, July 4th to 8th inclusive.

THE DAVENPORT BROTHERS are making a long tour of the state of Texas. They were in Austin on June 8th and were to have gone thence to Belton and Waco.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

OUR ADVICES CONCERNING AMUSEMENTS in London, Eng., and the provinces are up to June 11th. But little change had occurred in the programmes prepared for the Whitsuntide holidays. At the Olympic Miss Jessie Lee will appear nightly by Messrs. Madison Morton and A. W. Young, entitled "Not If I Know It," a new piece by Mr. Bothern, was announced to have been performed on June 17th..... At the Strand, Arthur Swanborough, acting manager, was announced to have taken a benefit on June 14th, when the following volunteer talent was to have appeared:—Miss Herbert, Miss Lydia Maitland, Edgar Bruce and the Yokes Family. The announced programme was as follows:—"Neighbors," "Twice Married," "A Happy Pair," "The Belles of the Kitchen" and the third, fourth and fifth scenes of the burlesque, "Esmeralda"..... French plays are being presented at the Lyceum, Globe and Opera Comique..... At the Alfred, Mlle. Lilian and her Corps Gipsy were announced to perform in a dramatization of Bulwer's novel of "Paul Clifford," entitled "The Lost Heir," to be followed by the second act of "Mazeppa." On June 17th, Miss Henrietta Hodson and the late Royalty company were to have commenced a twelve nights' engagement..... At the Grecian, a new drama in four acts, entitled "Sid," was to have been acted on June 19th..... At the Alhambra, Frederick Strange was to have had a grand annual benefit on June 14th, when two grand performances were to have been given and the following attractions presented:—The artists of the Gaiety Theatre in the second act of "Blue Beard;" the artists of the Strand Theatre in the comedy of "Neighbors;" the artists of the Globe Theatre in the first act of "Fal-sac-an-pa;" Mr. Bothern and several artists from the Haymarket in "My Aunt's Advice;" Miss Elise Holt in her specialties; M. Herve in his original character of "Le Compositeur Toquer;" Lionel Brough as "Policeman, X. 24;" T. Swinbourne in a recitation of "The Brothers," and Fred. Evans and his troupe of pantomimists from the Adelphi..... No changes other than the above had occurred or were announced at any of the other theatres..... Mr. Buckstone is suffering from inflammation of the eyes..... A movement is on foot for giving a complimentary banquet to the Comedie Francaise, on its first visit to England. A committee, including many high-y influential names, has been formed and were to have held their first meeting during the week ending June 17th.

THE RIGHTS OF VISITORS TO THEATRES.—The case of Lewis vs. Clifton was an action brought for recovery of damages for alleged wrongful imprisonment, and was heard in the Court of Exchequer, London, Eng., June 5th. The plaintiff is a solicitor practising in the city, and in April last he was at the Queen's Theatre, witnessing the performance of the play of "Joan of Arc," and not being able to hear the dialogue with any degree of distinctness, owing to some noise and confusion on the stage, he said, "speak out," but not in an unusually loud or boisterous tone. There were some persons of "turn him out," the police were on duty came and removed him from the theatre with more violence than was necessary, and being taken to Bow street police station, he was there charged by the defendant, who is the manager of the Queen's, with having created a disturbance at the theatre. He was removed to his cell and kept in custody until three o'clock in the morning when he was let out on bail. He appeared next morning before Mr. Vaughan, the police magistrate, who dismissed the charge. Plaintiff then brought this action. He said he was fond of Shakspeare performances, and had written some plays himself. He denied that he misconducted himself in any way, and considered he was justified in making the complaint he did as to the defective acoustic arrangements of the theatre. A witness stated that the plaintiff was "spirited" away to the police station after he had been taken in custody. Verdict for the plaintiff, 40s. damages.

THE GYMNASE THEATRE, of Paris, France, opened its doors to the public June 3d. The performances, which, by order of the marshal commanding-in-chief, were to terminate at 11 o'clock precisely, consisted of "La Veuve au Camelia," the "Femmes Terribles," an enfr'acte, by the veteran, M. Rene, and the "Grandes Demoiselles." While some of the buildings are still smoking from fire it may seem strange that theatres should be opened, but hundreds of persons who, for seven long months, have been debarred from following their profession, will joyfully welcome a return to their duties.

"MARIA STUART VON SCHOTTLAND," the first dramatic work of an officer of Uhlans, Lieut. von Wartenegg, which was very successful at Stuttgart, will be one of the novelties at the Vienna Burgtheatre.

AT THE THEATRE ROYAL DU PARC, of Brussels, the company of the Vaudeville Theatre, Paris, were performing at our latest advices.

HERR RODERICH BENEDIX has finished a new comedy, in four acts, entitled "Der Sohn der Hokerin."

MR. FREDERICK VINING died in London, Eng., June 26, at the advanced age of eighty-one. He was the son of Mr. Charles Vining, formerly an eminent silversmith residing in Kirby street, Hatton-garden, and at the early age of sixteen he made his first appearance on any stage as Young Norval for his brother's benefit at Gravesend. The encouragement he received determined his future profession. For four years he remained with Mr. Trotter, the manager of the Gravesend, Worthing, Hythe and Brighton theatres, and in 1809 he procured an engagement at Bath, where he made his debut as Duriel in "The Point of Honor." Thence he went to Norwich, and at last attained the height of his ambition by being engaged at Covent Garden, where he made his first appearance September 17th, 18 3, as Frederick in the comedy of "The Poor Gentleman." He was the original Count Frederick Friberg in "The Miller and His Men," and the last survivor of those who were associated with him in the drama. For several successive seasons he was the leading actor in genteel comedy, both here and at the Haymarket, where he became a great favorite. His last engagement was at the Olympic, under Mr. Alfred Wigan's management. The funeral took place June 30th, being largely attended.

THE AUTHORS OF "CLAM."—The following decision in the case of Shelley vs. Ross, was pronounced June 7th:—"Mr. Justice Hannen gave a very full and elaborate judgment, carefully pointing out the work actually done by the plaintiff, and in reference to the particular claim he said that no doubt the sentence given by the plaintiff and the changes he made in the MS. were valuable, but they were such only as an author in putting a drama on the stage would require from some one who had the knowledge he wanted. He had to consider whether assistance of that character gave the person who rendered it the title of joint author. He was of opinion it did not. He had no desire to disparage the character of Mr. Shelley's work by the comparison he was about to make. It was obvious that a technical knowledge was required for putting a drama on the stage, and in doing so the stage carpenter had frequently to be consulted. The mere fact of his rendering that assistance did not make him joint author with the original author of the piece, and that appeared to be the character of the work the plaintiff had done in connection with this drama. As the original plot of the piece remained altogether unaltered, and as all the incidents of the piece as put upon the stage were to be found in the original piece as written by the defendant, and as the action of the drama had in no way been altered by the plaintiff he had come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to establish his joint authorship. His decision was in favor of the defendant." Verdict for the defendant.

W. F. HALE, a dramatic author, died in London, Eng., June 4th. The deceased, who was only in his forty-seventh year, was the eldest son of the late venerable W. H. Hale, Archdeacon of London and Master of the Charterhouse, where he received his education and attained high classical honors. He afterwards entered the Middle Temple and was called to the bar. In conjunction with the late Francis Talfourd, he wrote several extravaganzas, amongst which may be named "Godiva" and "The Willow-Pattern Plate," both produced at the Strand Theatre, about twenty years ago. On his return from India, ten years before, the health of W. F. Hale rapidly gave way, and for some time past he had suffered severely from an affection of the spine.

J. HOLMES GROVES was to have commenced an engagement, limited to twelve nights, at Dublin, Ireland, on June 12th.

FRANCIS FAIRLIE'S Burlesque and Comedy Company were to have commenced a week's engagement in Portsmouth, Eng., June 12th.

CHARLES EDWARD RANEY obtained a decree of divorce, on the ground of adultery, from Mrs. Ranka, well known in the theatrical profession in London, Eng., as an amateur playing under the name of Miss Rose Arlington.

MISS FULLER, professionally known as Miss Rose Leclerq, obtained a decree in London, Eng., from her husband, Charles Percy Fuller, on the ground of adultery and cruelty. She was married to him March 19th, 1867, he representing himself to be a captain, but was in reality a dealer in horses, and had been separated from a former wife upon the same grounds. He was identified at Hollow-way prison, where he is in charge for felony.

MLLE. MARTENCHAMP and her company were announced to have commenced a brief season at Edinburgh, Scotland, June 12th.

RICHARD YOUNGE'S comedy company was to have commenced a brief season at Edinburgh, Scotland June 12th.

MONTAGUE, JAMES AND TOOKE'S comedy company was announced to have played twelve nights in Manchester, Eng., commencing June 19th.

THE QUARTETTE OF A MILLION OF MONEY" DRAMATIC COMPANY, on June 15th, were to have commenced a brief season at the new Queen's Theatre, Manchester, Eng.

A NEW THEATRE is about to be built in Utah, Eng. The Queen's Theatre there has been closed for some time past and there has been a total absence of dramatic performances in that town, and it is proposed to pull down the old and unsightly building and on its site to erect a new theatre.

FORTH THE THEATRES OF GLASGOW, Scotland, are playing opposite versions of the "Old Curiosity Shop."

THE THEATRE ROYAL, Hanley, DRAMATIC COMPANY were announced to have commenced a six nights' engagement at Bolton, Eng., June 19th.

MISS JULIA DALY was to have played six nights at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Eng., commencing June 26th.

GEORGE STANLEY'S Tyne dramatic company were to have commenced an engagement of six nights' duration at Stockton-on-Tees, Eng., June 12th.

Musical.

AT HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, Drury Lane Theatre, London, Eng., the programmes of the week ending June 10th were much interfered with in consequence of the indisposition of Mlle. Martinez. Her illness prevented the production announced for the 5th, though greatly to her disadvantage, especially with that portion of the audience who had heard her for the first time. Robert Le Diable" was repeated on Thursday, the 8th, the cast being Tocco speaks as follows:—"M. Betval (Bertram) the new tenor profundo from the Grand Opera, strengthened the good impression made on the part of his debut. His peculiar voice seemed more manageable and more at ease in the declamation, while his acting showed more ease. He was frequently and loudly applauded, especially during the second act, the grande of which he delivered excellently well. Mlle. Dinorah Worrin as Alice, Mlle. Trilena as Allice, Signor Nicolini as Robert, and Signor Mendolini as Bambalino, were all more or less excellent, the first named lady distinguishing herself by a reasonable, yet unexaggerated delivery of "Robert, toi que j'aime" and Mlle. Trilena, whose Alice, by the way, is not her best part, earning much applause by really artistic singing in the two well-known airs belonging to her part. Signor Mendolini was yet further distinguished by Mlle. Fioretti's Elena—an acknowledgment of the character's never known excelled during recent years. Mlle Fioretti is a mistress of her art. Too much praise can hardly be given to the excellence of the orchestra and the conductorship of Mr. Costa as regards the orchestral and choral music. It was evident that Mr. Eaglesone had set his mind upon making "Robert le Diable" a great feature of his season, and he has succeeded beyond a doubt..... La Figlia del Reggimento" was announced for Saturday, the 10th, with Mlle Marimon as Marie, but a change to "Lucia di Lammermoor," in consequence of the new artist's illness, brought forward Mlle Ilma di Murska, who, always ready and always excellent, left nothing for her audience to desire. The opera announced for Saturday was "Faust," with M. Capoul as the hero, and Mlle Leon Duval as Marguerite, in the room of Mlle Pauline Lucca, retired..... At the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, "La Favorita" was sung on Tuesday, on which occasion Signor Mario sang Ferdinando for the last time, the performances of which is thus commented upon:—"The great artist was in excellent voice for the part, and had seemingly made up his mind to create a sensation when bidding farewell to a part in which he has so often triumphed. He never carried out any intention more successfully, because he never acted with more splendid vigor or more irresistible force. Himself carried away by dramatic fervor, he, in turn, carried away the audience by exciting their intensest sympathy. In the great scene where Ferdinando repudiates the favors bestowed by his contemptible master, Signor Mario was superb, looking and acting as there is scarcely any living tenor capable of. Mr. Bentham, who were aided by the Crystal Palace Choir. Herr Manns conducted the performances..... The Tonic Sol-Fa Association had a gathering of members and friends, numbering 1,500 voices, at the Royal Albert Hall, on the 7th, conducted by Mr. J. Proudman, Mr. Nicholas Helps being the organist..... The Amateur Orchestral Union, an offshoot of the Wandering Minstrels, gave a concert, in aid of the funds of the Royal Orphan Asylum, Feltham, on the 7th inst..... An agreeable programme was provided by Mr. Brindley Richards, the pianist and composer, at his annual concert on the 8d inst., with the co-operation of Misses R. S. Jones, Edmonds, Llewellyn Bagnall, Watts, Angele, Messrs. V. Rigby and L. Thomas, as vocalists, M. Paque, violoncello, Mr. John Thomas, harp. The Welsh Choral Union sang part songs and choruses by Mr. Brinley Richards and Mr. John Thomas..... At the Polytechnic, the harpist, had an evening concert on the 6th, assisted by the Misses Aptommas (harp and piano), Herr Reczonka, pianist, Adms. Sisico, Lockhart, E. W. Purday, Julian, Henry Nicholl, Signori Caravoglia and Foli, vocalists; with four conductors—Mr J. Benedict, Signori Arditi and Bevignani and Herr W. Ganz..... The second Floral Hall concert, with the Royal Italian Opera Company, took place June 14th..... Mr. Sydney Smith gave his third pianoforte recital on the 7th inst..... The programme of Mr. Henry Leslie's last morning concert, on the 13th, contains the names of Mlle. Tietjens, Madame Alboni, Mlle. Murska, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Madame Sinico and Mlle. Marimon; Signori Fancelli, Visanni, Moriami, Agnesi, Caravoglia, Foli, Mr. Bentham and Mr. Sims Reeves. Mr. Leslie's benefit concert took place on the 2d, when his labor was sung for the last time this season..... Mlle. Jane Calderon, at her morning concert on the 3d, in the mansion of the Marquis of Downshire, had the co-operation of Mesdames Marie Cabel, Cora de Wilhorst, Cailag, Conneau; Signori Urio, Rizzoli, Gardoni, Delle Sedie, Ciabatta; Mr. Charles Lyall, Signor Sivori, violin; Signor Tito Mattei and M. Delahaye, pianists, and six conductors, Signori Alseri, Pinsuti, Arditi, Visetti, M. Maton and Sir Julius Benedict..... Mr. Walter Macfarren completed his interesting series of matinées on the 8th.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE Vienna theatre intend bringing out next winter, Floton's comic opera, "Ombre," the production of which has been promised by the Drury Lane manager in his prospectus. Offenbach's latest composition, the operetta "Fantasio," is now in preparation, and the prolific composer of opera bouffe is already engaged in writing another opera for the same theatre, entitled "The Black Pirate."

HENRY HAIGH'S ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY was performing in Derby, Eng., at our latest advices.

ISIDORE DE SOLLAS' London Opera Company were to have commenced a season of twelve nights at Bristol, Eng., June 12th.

MISS EMILY SOLDENE was to have taken a benefit at the Philharmonic Theatre, London, Eng., June 14th, when she was announced to have sung Arsaces in "Il Trovatore," for the first time, also Tom Tug in "The Waterman," likewise for the first time.

THE COVENT GARDEN "Grand Duchess" Opera Company were performing in Blackburn, Eng., at our latest advices.

Variety Halls.

NO MARKED CHANGE had occurred in the programmes of the various music halls in London, Eng., nor were any announced, the holiday programmes remaining intact.

IN BIRMINGHAM, Eng., at the London Museum Music Hall, the brothers Griffiths, negro impersonators, and Miss Amelia Jedder have been added to the company. Tom Carey, Irish comic, and the Silbon troupe of gymnasts continued there..... At the Crystal Palace, Miss Macgregor, vocalist; H. Breeze, comic; Mrs. Ormonde Collis, character singer; Guy Linton and Fred. Wallingford, comics, were the latest attractions.

CLEO, a flying trapeze performer, was the fresh attraction at Pullan's music hall, Bradford, Eng.

WILLIAM H. RUSSELL died at Birmingham, Eng., May 31st, aged 49. He had been for eight years stage manager of Day's Crystal

Eugene Sheldenburger & Co.'s
COLOSSAL MENAGERIE & CIRCUS,
THE MOST SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITION OF THE AGE.

After three weeks in the STATE OF OHIO, during which time the "Buckeye Boys" have deposited in the treasury of the above establishment the enormous sum of FORTY-TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS,
it entered the STATE OF INDIANA, and has continued to meet with the same WONDERFUL SUCCESS.

This unprecedented record may be attributed to the grand collection of RARE WILD ANIMALS, the large number of superior artists who appear within the arena, and the eclat which surrounds the whole establishment and makes its arenic displays a scene of gorgeous grandeur never before witnessed upon American soil.

In the STATE OF OHIO, for FIFTEEN SUCCESSIVE DAYS, the Sheldenburger Show exhibited in towns which had already been visited by two and sometimes three so-called circuses and menageries during the present season and always met with full pavilions.

This GRAND UPRISING OF THE MASSES proves this to be, in the eyes of the people,
THE MASTER SHOW OF THE AGE.

The attractions of this great show are manifold, and among the many may be mentioned:

SEVENTEEN CAGES OF LIVING WILD ANIMALS,
THE GREAT BLACK RHINOCEROS,
A HORNED HORSE, AN AFRICAN ELAND,
AN AARRD VARK, A MILK-WHITE OSTRICH,
A HERD OF CAMELS, A GRAND AVIARY.

Among its arenic attractions will be found
MLLE. JOSEPHINE DE MOTT,
the highly accomplished Bareback Equestrienne.
JAMES DE MOTT, the great Bareback Equestrian.
LITTLE MARY BROWN,

but 8 years of age, the smallest Bareback Equestrienne, and the only one of her sex in the world who throws somersaults.

H. R. H. PRINCE SADI D'JALMA, THE WONDERFUL MANSERPENT, whose astonishing manipulations of the human form have placed him far beyond the reach of all pigmy rivals and given him the proud title of Champion Contortionist of the World.

JEROME RUBENS, the incomparable artist upon the upright ladder.

HARRY MACK, the wonderful Juggler, and his highly educated Troupe of Siberian Bloodhounds, the only performing Dogs of this species in the world.

WILLIAM AND WALLA FOREPAUGH, the matchless Gymnasts.

THE BARRELLI BROS., the unapproachable Acrobats.
